DR. SCARBOROUGH; Vandergucht
sc. In the octavo edition of Cowley's Works.

Sir Charles Scarborough, first physician to Charles II. James II. and William III. was, by his strong and lively parts, uncommon learning, and extensive practice, eminently qualified for that honourable station. He was one of the greatest mathematicians of his time. Mr. Oughtred informs us, that his memory was tenacious to an incredible degree: that he could recite in order all the propositions of Euclid, Archimedes, and other ancient mathematicians, and apply them on every occasion*. He assisted the famous Dr. William Harvey in his book “De Genera“tione Animalium,” and succeeded him as lecturer of anatomy and surgery. The lecture, which was founded by Dr. Richard Caldwell, was read by him in Surgeon’s Hall, and continued for sixteen or seventeen years, with great applause. He, in his course, explained the nature of the muscles, and was the first that attempted to account for muscular strength and motion upon geometrical principles, and he very judiciously and happily applied mathematics to medicine in other instances. His “Syllabus Musculorum” is printed with “The Anatomical Administration of all the Muscles, &c. by William Molins †, Master in Chirurgery.” He was also author of several mathematical treatises, a Compendium of Lilly’s Grammar, and an Elegy on his friend Mr. Cowley. He was a man of amiable manners, and of great pleasantry in conversation. Seeing the dutchess of Portsmouth eat to excess, he said to her, with his usual frankness, “Madam, I will deal with you as a physician should do; you must eat less, use more exercise, take physick, or be sick.”—He died Feb. 26, 1693*.

chymistry. This helped to recommend him to Charles II. who sometimes amused himself in his laboratory. He was the first physician that attended that prince in his last illness, when he ventured to incur the penalty of the law, by letting him blood. This was approved of by others of the faculty, and was indeed the only means of preventing his sudden death*. A thousand pounds were ordered him by the privy-council for his attendance on the king, but he never received the money. In the "Philosophical Transactions" are some curious observations by him concerning ants, and the animalcula in pepper water †. There is also an account of his transfusing forty-nine ounces of blood out of a calf into a sheep. The latter was, in all appearance, as strong and healthy after the operation as it was before.

PETRUS BARWICK, M. D. serenissimo regi Carolo II^o. e medicis ordinariis: G. Virtue sc. Before "Vita Johannis Barwick," &c. 8vo.

Peter Barwick was brother to Dr. John Barwick, dean of St. Paul's. He was a man of uncommon skill and diligence in his profession, and was very successful in the small-pox, and in various kinds of fevers. He wrote an excellent defence of Dr. Harvey's doctrine of the circulation of the blood, and the life of the dean his brother, in pure and elegant Latin. the latter was published with a preface, by Mr. Hilckiah Bedford, 1721. His defence of the "Eikon Basilike" against Dr. Walker, which was written in his 74th year does not 8vo. There is an anonymous portrait of him in a doctor of physic's gown, by Sherwin, before "The Character of Nobility," 1672; small 8vo.

Dr. William Ramesey appears to me to be the person already mentioned †, who bewildered himself in astrology; and when his intellects were perfectly confused and clouded, advanced the doctrine of dark stars. He was author of the following books: "Christian Judicial Astrology vindicated, and Demonology confuted; in Answer to Nat. Homes, D. D. with a Discourse on the Sun's Eclipse, 29 Mar. 1652." 12mo. He, in the title-page, styles himself William Ramesey, Gent. as he does in that of the next book: "An Introduction to the Judgment of the Stars," 1653: fol. "Names, Natures, Virtues, Symptoms, and Antidotes of poisons," 1663, by William Ramesey, M. D. 8vo. "ΕΛΜΥΘΟΓΙΑ, or Physical Observations concerning Worms," 8vo. 1668. He is again styled M. D. in the title to this tract. It should here be observed, that he invented an instrument to cleanse the stomach, upon which he wrote a pamphlet, printed in small 8vo. 1672. It appears from "The Character of Nobility," that he was of the Dalhousy family.

W. Sherwin ad vivum del. et sc. 1671.

William Sermon, a physician of Bristol, was possessed of a palliative remedy for the dropsey, by which the duke of Albemarle was greatly relieved: but he not long after relapsed into this distemper, which at length proved fatal to him †. Dr. Sermon, who was naturally vain, grew vainer than ever upon his success, and seemed to think nothing beyond the reach of his skill; as if the man that cured the Great Monck of the dropsey, could do every thing in the power of Physic. He was author of “The Ladies Companion, or English Midwife,” &c. 1671; 8vo. and of “A Friend to the Sick, or the honest Englishman’s Preservation,” &c. 1673. 8vo. to which is prefixed his portrait, in a doctor’s gown; but there is great doubt of his having been a graduate in his profession. See Wood’s “Fasti,” ii. coll. 201.

Doctor John Archer was author of “Every Man his own Physician,” &c. printed for himself, in 1673, 8vo. To this are subjoined a Treatise on Melancholy, and a compendious Herbal. He seems to have been of such an Epicurean taste as was perfectly adapted to the court and character of Charles the Second; having in the first of these works placed the sixth sense at the head of the other five, as holding them all in subordination. He, at the end of this book, mentions these three inventions as the issue of his own brain: the first was certainly in use among the Romans, namely, A hot bath, by steam, for the cure of various disorders. This will naturally remind the reader of the fumigations of Dominiceti. 2. An oven, which doth, with a small faggot, bake, distil, boil a pot, or stew; with all the same charge of fire, time, and labour. This oven was moveable: something like it has been lately advertised. 3. A chariot, with which one horse can as easily draw five or more people, as two horses can that number in the ordinary way. It is also contrived, that a man who sits in it may move it without a horse. Here the machine invented by Mr. Moore will as naturally recur to the reader's memory as the baths of Dominiceti did in the first article.

TOBIAS WHITAKER, medicus ordinarius Caroli Secundi Æt. 60; J. Chantry sc. 12770.

Doctor Tobias Whitaker, physician in ordinary to Charles II. seems to have had as utter a dislike to unpalatable medicines as the most squeamish of his patients. He was much more a friend to the vintner, than to the apothecary, and was as cordially attached to wine, as Dr. Archer appears to have been to women. It is very probable, that either of them, as physicians cians to the court, would, in some cases, have prescribed both. He was author of "A Discourse of Water," 1634, 12mo. His principal work is "The Tree of Humane Life, or the Blood of the Grape, proving the Possibility of maintaining Life from Infancy to Old Age without Sickness, by the Use of Wine," Lond. 1638, 8vo. This was translated into Latin, and printed at Franckfort, 1655. In the former of these pieces, he writes himself "Doctor of Physicke, of Norwich;" in the latter "of London." He also published "An Elenchus of Opinions concerning the Small-Pox," 1661, 12mo. prefixed to which is his head.

It appears from Chamberlayne's "Present State of England," 1671, that, besides four physicians in ordinary for the king's person, and two for the household, there were above a dozen more, who were his majesty's sworn servants, But were not in waiting. It seems that Charles II. was not only an encourager of obscure physicians, but even of quacks*, a race of men who not only kill us, but kill us with less dexterity, and consequently with more pain, than the worst physicians do. It is probable that the following excellent person preserved more lives than were destroyed by the whole herd of empirics that infested the metropolis in this reign.

THOMAS SYDENHAM; M. Beale p. A. Blooteling sc. 8vo.

* Welwood, p. 149.

Dr. Thomas Sydenham, who was long at the head of his profession, was a physician of great penetration and experience, and went far beyond all his contemporaries in improving the art of physic. He took late to study, but his quick parts and great natural sagacity enabled him to make a prodigious progress in a little time. He dared to innovate, where nature and reason led the way; and was the first that introduced the cool regimen in the small-pox. Hence he gave an effectual check to a distemper that has been more pernicious to mankind, than the plague itself; and which had been inflamed and rendered still more pernicious, by injudicious physicians. He carefully studied, and wrote observations upon every epidemical distemper that prevailed during the course of his practice. He had many opponents: but his constant success was a sufficient answer to all the cavils of his antagonists. He freely communicated to the world his judicious remarks on a great variety of acute and chronical distempers; and particularly on those that sweep away the greatest number of the human species. What he has written on the nervous and hysterical colic, fevers, riding in consumptive cases, and the use of milk and chalybeates, deserves to be mentioned to his honour. He was the first that used laudanum with success, and that gave the bark after the paroxysm in agues. After his death, was published his "Method of curing almost all Diseases *." I have been informed, that his works were more esteemed by foreign physicians than by the generality of the faculty in his own country †. There is a catalogue of them in the "Biographia Britannica." Dr. Thomas Willis was a very eminent anatomist, philosopher, and physician, and one of the most elegant writers of his age, in the Latin tongue. His works were much celebrated at home and abroad, and his practice was proportionable to his fame. He was regular in his devotions, his studies, and visiting his patients; and his custom was to dedicate his Sunday fees to the relief of the poor. He had a deep insight into every branch of science to which he applied himself, especially anatomy, in which he made some discoveries; particularly, *the sinuses of the veins, and their use. His "Cerebri Anatomæ †" gained him a great reputation, as did also his book "De Anima Brutorum," his "Pharmaceutice Rationalis," &c. The first of these books had an elegant copy of verses written on it by Mr. Philip Fell ‡, and the drawings for the plates were

Mr. Addison informs us, in his "Travels," that the physician retained by the little republick of St. Marino, when he was in Italy, was well read in the works of our countrymen Harvey, Willis, and Sydenham. Ob. 11 Nov. 1675.

§ Willis and Lower first recommended the waters of Astrop, which were afterwards decried by Radcliffe. The reason which I have heard assigned for his decrying them, was, because the people of the village insisted upon his keeping a bastard child, which was laid to him by an infamous woman of that place. Upon this the doctor declared "that he would put a toad into "their well," and accordingly cried down the waters, which soon lost their reputation.

this reign, distinguished himself in that of Charles I. by writing an apology in Latin for Dr. Harvey's doctrine of the circulation of the blood, in opposition to Æmilius Parifanus †. In the same book are some judicious observations on the operation of purging medicines. He was author of several other pieces, some of which are in the "Philosophical Transactions*." Glanvill, speaking in his "Plus Ultra" of the modern improvements in anatomy, numbers sir George Ent, Dr. Gliffon, and Dr. Willis, with the most celebrated discovers in that useful science ‡. The two former were among the first members of the Royal Society.

Dr. Francis Gliffon, king's professor of physic at Cambridge, was universally esteemed one of the best physicians of his age. This book was given by will of sir George Ent, made when he was dying, to Dr. Walter Charlton. The ingenious Dr. Baker author of the Life of Harvey, prefixed to his works in 4to. observes that the Latinity of this book is superior to that of his other writings. This anecdote assigns the reason of it.

His account of sanguification was esteemed very rational, and generally much approved of, as was also his "Anatomia Hepatis." His "Tractatus de Natura Substantiæ energetica," &c. Lond. 1672; 4to. and his "Tractatus de Ventriculo et Intestinis," &c. Amstel. 1677; 4to. are among his principal works: his portrait is prefixed to both. I was told by a gentleman in Dorsetshire, who was nearly allied to his family, that he visited a considerable number of patients in the time of the plague, and preserved himself from the infection, by thrusting bits of sponge, dipped in vinegar, up his nostrils. This excellent physician and worthy man, whose works were well known abroad, as well as at home, died in a very advanced age, the 14th of October, 1677. I strongly suspect this portrait not to be genuine.

Richard Lower was educated at Christ-church in Oxford, under Dr. Thomas Willis, of whom he learned to be an excellent anatomist; and that great physician is said to have learnt several things from him. Upon the death of Dr. Willis, he succeeded to a great part of his practice, and was in as high repute as any physician in London. ed. He was author of several medical pieces, of which Mr. Wood has given us a catalogue. But his capital work is his book "De Corde," which has been often printed. In this book, he lays claim to the invention of transfusing the blood, to which Francis Potter, a native of Mere in Wiltshire, had certainly a prior right*. Dr. Lower's name has been impudently affixed to several vile nostrums sold in the shops.

GUALTERUS CHARLETONUS, M. D.

Dr. Walter Charleton was a man of great natural endowments, and one of the most universal scholars of his time. In the early part of his life, he closely studied the Greek and Roman authors; and afterwards applied himself to the study of natural and moral philosophy, history, and antiquities; besides the several branches of literature that were essential to his profession. He has left us ample testimonies of his diligence and capacity in his various writings, which were generally well received in the reign of Charles II. But of late years, such is the fate of good, as well as bad authors, they have been generally neglected. It appears that he was well acquainted with the history of phy-

* See his article in Wood—The transfusion of the blood from one human body to another, from which the physicians of this time had great expectations, may be ranked with Taliacotius's famous chimera of supplying defective parts, by grafting others in their places. To transfuse the fluids of the body, can do us but little service, except a method be discovered of renewing the solids.

Of all his writings, none made a greater noife in the world than his “Treatife of Stone-henge ;” in which he has endeavoured to prove, in oppofition to the opinion of Inigo Jones, that it is a Danifh monument. Sir William Dugdale, and other eminent antiquaries, agreed with him in this conjecture. Though he was phyfician in ordinary to Charles I. and was continued in that ftation by his fon, it does not appear that he was retained by him after the Reftoration. He was in the reign of William III. elected prefident of the College of Phyficians. The author of his life in the “Biographia Britannica,” has given him a more advantageous character than Mr. Wood. The reader may fee fome account of him in Hearne’s preface to “Peter Langtoft,” Sect. XX. Ob. 1707, Æt. 88.

Sir WILLIAM PETTY; Edwin Sandys fc. large 4to.

Sir William Petty, who was fome time profeffor of anatomy in Oxford, was fellow of the College of Phyficians in the reign of Charles II. He gave early proofs of that comprehensive and inquisitive genius for which he was afterwards fo eminent; and which feems to have been defigned by nature for every branch of fcience to which he applied himfelf. At the age of fifteen, he was master of such a compass of knowledge in the languages, arithmetic, geometry, astronomy, navigation, practical mathematics, and mechanical trades, as few are capable of attaining in the longest life. He made his way in the world under great disadvantages in point of circumstances, having acquired a very moderate fortune with as much difficulty, as he afterwards rose with ease to wealth and affluence*. He was an excellent chymist and anatomist, and a perfect master of every other kind of knowledge that was requisite to the profession of physic. He was a very able mathematician, had a fine hand at drawing, was skilful in the practical parts of mechanics, and a most exact surveyor. But what he particularly applied himself to, and understood beyond any man of his age, was the knowledge of the common arts of life, and political arithmetic. His admirable essays in this art, have even raised his reputation to a higher pitch than it rose to in his life-time; as experience has fully proved the justness of his calculations†. This great man, who knew better than any of his contemporaries how to enrich the nation and himself, died the 16th of Dec. 1687,

* He told Mr. Aubrey, that he was driven to great straits for money, when he was in France; and that he had lived a week upon two or three pennyworth of walnuts. But he, at length, made his way through all difficulties; and as he expressed it to that gentleman, "hewed out his fortune himself." MS. by Mr. Aubrey, in Mus. Ashmol.

† Captain John Graunt, and Dr. Charles Davenant, rendered themselves famous for political calculation, and have published several excellent books of that kind. The former gained great reputation by his "Natural and Political Observations upon the Bills of Mortality," first published in 1661, 4to. This work has been attributed to his intimate friend sir William Petty, and the name of Graunt has been by many supposed to be fictitious: but see the life of this ingenious person in the "Biographia Britannica."

Robert Morison, a native of Aberdeen, studied physic in France, where he particularly applied himself to botany. He, in a short time, became so great a proficient, that he was appointed superintendant of the royal garden at Blois. In 1660, he came into England, and was made botanical professor to Charles II. and overseer of his gardens. He was afterwards chosen professor of botany at Oxford, where he read several courses of lectures in that science, in the middle of the physic garden*. His "Prælua Botanica," in two volumes 8vo. his "Plantarum Umbelliferarum Distributio," in folio, and his "Historia Plantarum," which is also in folio, have done him much honour. He finished only the second part of his "History of Plants:" the third part, which he had begun, was continued by Jacob Bobart, keeper of the physic garden at Oxford, who also added a third volume. It is not known what became of the first.

LEONARD PLUKENET, M. D.

Leonard Plukenet was one of the most excellent and laborious botanists of this, or any other age. He was author of the "Phytographiæ Plucenetianæ," "Almagestum Botanicum," and other works of the like kind;

on which he spent the greatest part of his life and fortune. His "Phytography" is mentioned with the highest encomiums in the "Philosophical Transactions," for February, 1696-7. The encomiast says, that, "without flattery, it may deserve the name of a performance to the improvement of so great a part of the universal history of nature, as hath not been done by the whole complex of preceding ages." His "Opera Botanica," with cuts, were printed at London, in 6 tomes, folio, 1720.

D. of All Souls, student in physic, has lately taught, that air is impregnated with a nitro-aerial spirit, which doctrine he confirmed by experiments."—

The last of the treatises *, concerning the rickets, has singular merit, and was allowed to be the best extant on that subject. Effigies NATHANAELIS HIGHMORII, in Medicina Doctoris, Æt. 63, 1677; A. Blootelingf. small b. sb.

Nathanael Highmore, a native of Fordingbridge, in Hampshire, was educated at Trinity college, in Oxford. He practised physic with great reputation, at Shirburn, in Dorsetshire, where no man was more esteemed for his skill in his profession, or better beloved for his humanity and benevolence ‡. He was the first that wrote a systematical treatise upon the structure of the human body, which he adapted to Dr. Harvey’s doctrine of the circulation of the blood, and dedicated it to that great man. He discovered the duct for the conveyance of the seed from the testes to the parastataæ, whose intricate folds he first described, as he also did the fibres and vessels of the spleen, which had long been mistaken for veins §. The cavity in the jaw, called antrum Highmorianum, after his name, † Bath was not then the scene of pleasure that it is at present. Its physicians are now four times as numerous as they were in Mayow’s time; and yet it is well known that great numbers of the people that resort thither, destroy their constitutions on the spot, much faster than the physicians and the waters can repair them.

is another of his discoveries. Trivial as this may appear, the skilful anatomist considers it as investigating the secret retreat of some of the enemies of life, and pointing out, at the same time, what is essential to the human frame. He died the 21st of March, 1684, in the 71st year of his age. He wrote, "Corporis Humani Disquisitio Anatomica." Hagæ Com. 1651, folio. There is a small head of the author in the title. He also wrote "the History of Generation," Lond. 1651, 8vo. dedicated to the honourable Robert Boyle. To this is added, "A Discourse of the cure of Wounds by Sympathy." "De Passione hysterica et Affectione hypochondriaca," 1660. 8vo. "De hysterica et hypochondriaca Passione, Responso epistolari ad Doctorem Willis," 1670, 4to.

Everard Maynwarding was descended from the same family with Arthur Maynwarding, esq. a name much better known to the world. This family, which had been long seated in Cheshire, was anciently one of the most honourable in the kingdom*. He was author of the following books: "The ancient and modern Practice of Physic;" "A Treatise on the Preservation of Health and long Life;" "The Complete Physician;" "A History of the Venereal Lues;" "The Pharmacopæan Physician's Repository;" "A Treatise of GIDEON HARVEY, med. spag. et dogm. doctor; A Hertocks f. Before his “Great Venus unmasked,” 1672; 12mo.

Gideon Harvey, who was esteemed but little better than an hypothetical pretender to physic, wrote against the frauds and empiricism of the physicians and apothecaries, as well as those of the quacks of his time. He made it his business to cry down the faculty, and published several books with a view of making people their own doctors. His “Art of curing Diseases by Expectation,” is one of the most remarkable of his works. In this he intimates, that nature, aided by expectation only, may be more safely relied on than the prescriptions of the generality of physicians; and that those who employ them are frequently amused with taking such things as have no real effect in working their cure. He was very dogmatical; and consequently, as far as he was so, was no more to be trusted than the worst of those against whom he exclaimed. There can be but little difference betwixt a dogmatist in physic, and an ignorant pretender to it. In 1704 was published the third edition of his "Family Physician," &c. To this book, which gave great offence to the apothecaries, is subjoined a large catalogue of drugs, and the prices at which they should be sold in the shops*. I know not the year in which he died; but he was living, and physician to the Tower, in the late king's reign †.

* In 1703, was published a book which gave greater offence to the apothecaries than any of Dr. Harvey's. It is intitled, "The Crafts and Frauds of Physic exposed, by R. Pitt, M. D. Fellow and Censor of the College of Physicians, and F. R. S." 8vo.

† There was, perhaps, never any thing more remarkable than the fortune of this man. About the latter end of king William's reign, there was a great debate who should succeed the deceased physician to the Tower. The contending parties were so equally matched in their interests and pretensions, that it was extremely difficult to determine which should have the preference. The matter was at length brought to a compromise; and Dr. Gideon Harvey was promoted to that office, for the same reason that Sixtus V. was advanced to the pontificate; because he was, in appearance, sickly and infirm, and his death was expected in a few few months. He, however, survived not only his rivals, but all his contemporary physicians; and died after he had enjoyed his sine-cure above fifty years.

‡ The small print of a man with a pestilential body lying before him, prefixed to this book, was most probably intended for the author's portrait.

“logismi Chymici,” &c. and of several pieces in vindication of the chymical practice of physic, against the Galenists. One of these was intitled, “Galeno-pale, or a chymical Trial of the Galenists;” to which one William Johnson wrote an answer, which produced a reply, namely, “A Gag for Johnson’s Animadversions upon Galeno-pale, or a Scourge for Galen.” He also wrote in vindication of lord Bacon’s philosophy, against the very learned, and no less dogmatical Henry Stubbe. One of the most extraordinary of his pieces is his “Letter to Mr. Henry Stubbe, wherein the Galenical Method and Medicaments, as likewise Blood-letting in particular, are offered to be proved ineffectual, or destructive to Mankind, by experimental Demonstrations.” Stubbe wrote an answer to this, in an “Epistolary Discourse concerning Phlebotomy, in Opposition to George Thompson, Pseudo-Chymist, a pretended disciple to lord Verulam.” Our author Thompson published a treatise, entitled, “Animatias, or the true Way of preserving the Blood in its Integrity.” His principal aim in this book was to put a stop to the common practice of bleeding.

SAMUELIS COLLINS, med. doctor, Æt. 67; W. Faithorne ad vivum delin. et sc. b. sb. finely engraved.

Samuel Collins, who studied at Padua, was incorporated doctor of physic at Oxford in 1659. Mr. Wood informs us, that he was known by the name of Dr. Samuel Collins, junior. He was author of “The present State of Russia,” 1671; 8vo. He afterwards published a book of anatomy, in folio, which is of less value than the the head which is placed before it. Dr. Garth speaks thus of this author in his Dispensary :

“ Where would the long-neglected Collins fly,
“ If bounteous Carus should refuse to buy ?”

The name of Samuel Collins is in the list of the College of Physicians for 1700, at which time he was censor. It occurs again in the list for 1707.

John, son of Nehemiah Rogers, of Duddingphysic at Utrecht. He, in 1664, was admitted to the same degree in the university of Oxford, being then a practitioner in his faculty, at Bermondsey, in Surrey. He published "Analec̄ta

Doctor JAMES WOLVERIDGE: a small portrait, in a large wig, fitting in a great chair. In the same print are a midwife, and a big-bellied woman; Crofts sc. 8vo.

It is highly probable, that the doctor should be placed with the empirics. He was author of "Speculum Matricis, or the expert Midwife's Handmaid," 1671; before which is his print.

There is a print, on which I have seen, in manuscript, the name of Doctor WILLIAM ROWLAND, which appears to me to be the print of Riverius; but quære; Rowland is mentioned by Wood.

Theophilus de Garencieres, doctor of physic, of the university of Caen, in Normandy, was, in 1657, incorporated in the same degree at Oxford, being at that time domestic physician to the French ambassador. Several writers have borne testimony to his character, as a man of distindistinguished parts and learning. He was author of the “Angliæ Flagellum, sive Tabes Anglica,” 1647, 24to. “The admirable Virtues, &c. of the true and genuine Tincture of Coral,” 1676. 8vo. He translated into English “*The true Prophecies or Prognostics of Michael Nostradamus, Physician to Henry II. Francis II. and Charles IX. kings of France,” 1672, folio. Wood informs us, that he died in a poor and obscure condition, within the liberty of Westminster, of a broken heart, occasioned by the ill usage of a certain knight; but neither mentions his name, nor the time of the author’s death.

* Nostradamus, who by some has been revered as a prophet, by others detested as a forcerer, and by most despised as a trifler, was held in high estimation by Henry II. of France. He died July 2, 1566. His body is said to have been buried half in, and half without the church of the Cordeliers, at Salon, on account of the ambiguity of his character, of which Jodellus, the author of the following quibbling epigram, had not the least doubt.

“Nostra-damus cum falsa damus, nam fallere nostrum est;

“Et cum verba damus, nil nisi nostra damus.”

In the curious “Letters which passed between Abraham Hill, Esq.” &c. p. 204, 205, is the following extract, written by Mr. John Newman, and addressed to that gentleman †. “From Marseilles, I journeyed to Salon, which is about twenty miles; here I saw the tomb of the famous French prophet, Nostradamus: His works I have seen; every line is an independent riddle; it may be said of them, as of the oracles of the Sibyls, that they are sown at random in the large field of time, there to take root and get credit by the event, as these have done: for example, when the French took Arras, this verse was found in Nostradamus: “Les Heretiers des Crapaux prendront Sara.” By the heirs of the toads is meant the French; (the three toads being their arms before the flowers de lys) Sara you must read backwards, and the thing is done. Upon our king’s death, they found this verse: “Le Senat de Londres metteront a Mort le Roy;” and upon Cromwell’s success in Flanders this; “Les (le) Oliver se plantera en Terra firme.” “Shall get footing on the continent.””

† The letter is dated from Paris, Aug. 19, 1659.

Romstet sc. 8vo.* The arms have a near relation to those of the noble family of Annandale; but no mention is made of this person in the account of that house in Douglas's "Peerage of Scotland."

Dr. John Johnston appears to have been a physician settled abroad. I am strongly of opinion that he was author of the following book: "A Description of the Nature of four-footed Beasts, with their figures engraven in Brass, written in Latin by Dr. John Johnston. Translated into English by J. P." Amsterdam, 1678, folio. In the copy of this book, in my possession, are subjoined to the letter press, which consists of one hundred and nineteen pages, eighty folio copper plates. Many of the figures in these prints, have been copied for Dr. Hill's "Natural History." The author, at the conclusion of his preface, promises the reader a "History of Serpents and Insects." I am certain that there is a continuation of this work, but cannot say to what length it was carried.

William Salmon was an early pretender to physic, which he practised, with various success, for a long course of years. He published a considerable number of medical books, the chief of which is his "Seplassium," "The compleat Physician, or the Druggist's Shop opened; explicating all the Particulars of which Medicines this day are composed and made," &c. in a thick octavo, consisting of 1207 pages. His great work is a large Herbal in folio, which was intended as an improvement of that of Gerard; but is much inferior to it. His "Polygraphice, or the Arts of Drawing, Engraving, Etching, Limning, Painting," &c. not to mention those of alchymy, making the grand elixir, chiromancy, and many others, has sold better than all the rest of his works: the tenth edition of it was printed in 1701. He had a large library, which was far more copious than valuable: the same may be said of his compilations. He was a great vender of nostrums, which was,

was, and is still, a much better trade than that of book-making. Dr. Garth plainly hints at this author in his Dispensary :

“ Cowslips and poppies o’er his eyes he spread,
“ And Salmon’s works he laid beneath his head.”

See the following reign.

LIONEL LOCKYER, Æt. 70; Sturt sc. four English verses.

Lionel Lockyer was famous for his pill, which was in high vogue in this reign. Its reputation was too great to be of long continuance. He died the 26th of April, 1672, in the 72d year of his age, and lies buried in the church of St. Saviour’s, Southwark; where a handsome monument is erected to his memory, with his effigy at full length. This is his epitaph, written by some empiric in poetry.

“ Here Lockyer lies interr’d, enough; his name
“ Speaks one hath few competitors in fame;
“ A name so great, so gen’ral it may scorn
“ Inscriptions which do vulgar tombs adorn.
“ A dimunition ’tis to write in verse
“ His eulogies, which most men’s mouths re“ hearse:
“ His virtues and his pills are so well known,
“ That envy can’t confine them under stone:
“ But they’ll survive his dust, and not expire
“ Till all things else, at th’ universal fire.
“ This verse is lost; his pills embalm him safe
“ To future times, without an epitaph.”

His pills are now sold by William Nicoll, book-feller, in St. Paul’s Church-Yard.

JACOBUS COOKE, different from the former; Æt. 71; R. W. sc. 8vo. These heads are before the several editions of his “Marrow of Chirurgery.”

James Cooke, of Warwick, was a general undertaker in physic as well as surgery. He, by uniting two professions, carried on a very lucrative trade in that town for a long course of years. He was author of “Melificium Chirurgiæ, or the Marrow of Chirurgery.” To a latter edition of this book is subjoined a Treatise of Anatomy, and another intitled, “The Marrow of Physic;” 4to.

It is evident, from the print, that he was not eighty years of age when it was engraved. It is not unusual to alter the date of a portrait for different editions of an author's works.

William Walwin, who lived at the Star, in the Postern, by Little Morefields, published a book in this reign, entitled, “Physic for Families.” This physic the doctor prepared himself, self, and recommends it as answering all intentions of cure, in every kind of distemper, by sea and land: and that “without the trouble, hazard, pain, or danger of purges, vomiters, bleedings, issues, glisters, blisters, opium, antimony, and quicksilver, so full of perplexity in sickness*.” He tells us, that he is not without hope of seeing all these excluded from practice, to the perpetual security, ease, and quiet, of all patients whatsoever. He has given us a list of thirty-three of his own nostrums, together with a detail of their virtues. Among these are his succus vitæ, his sanguis vitæ, his medulla vitæ, his vis vitæ, and his vita vitæ. The latter part of his book contains a recital of his cures, in about fifty instances. We are left to credit him upon his own testimony, as there is not a single affidavit to confirm it. The practice of procuring and printing oaths, seems to be a modern improvement of empiricism.

Valentine Greatraks, an Irish gentleman, had a strong impulse upon his mind to attempt the cure of diseases, by touching or stroking the parts affected. He afterwards came into England, where his reputation soon rose to a prodigious gious height: but it declined almost as fast, when the expectations of the multitudes that resorted to him were not answered. Mr. Glanvill imputed his cures to a fanative quality inherent in his constitution; some to fiction; and others to the force of imagination in his patients*. Of this there were many instances; one of which, if a fact, is related by Mons. St. Evremond in a peculiar strain of pleasantry. It is certain that the great Mr. Boyle believed him to be an extraordinary person, and that he has attested several of his cures. His manner of stroking some women, was said to be very different from his usual method of operation †.

SUR-

In 1751. * I was myself a witness of the powerful workings of imagination in the populace, when the waters of Glastonbury were at the height of their reputation. The virtues of the spring there, were supposed to be supernatural; and to have been discovered by a revelation made in a dream, to one Matthew Chancellor. The people did not only expect to be cured of such distempers as were in their nature incurable, but even to recover their lost eyes, and their mutilated limbs. The following story, which scarce exceeds what I observed upon the spot, was told me by a gentleman of character. “An old woman in the workhouse at Yeovil, who had long been a cripple and made use of crutches, was strongly inclined to drink of the Glastonbury waters, which she was assured would cure her of her lameness. The master of the workhouse procured her several bottles of water, which had such an effect, that she soon laid aside one crutch, and not long after, the other. This was extolled as a miraculous cure. But the man protested to his friends, that he had imposed upon her, and fetched the waters from an ordinary spring.” I need not inform the reader, that when the force of imagination had spent itself, she relapsed into her former infirmity.

† In the reign of Charles I. an accusation was brought before the court of Star-chamber, and afterwards before the College of Physicians, against one John Leverett, a gardener, who undertook to cure all diseases, but especially the king's evil, “by way of touching, or stroking with hand.” He used to speak with great contempt of the royal touch, and grossly imposed upon numbers of credulous people. He asserted, that he was the seventh son of a seventh son; and profanely said, that “he found virtue to go out of him;” so that he was more weakened by touching thirty or forty in a day, than if he had dug eight rods of ground. He also affirmed, that if he touched a woman, he

This sublime genius, under the disadvantages of "poverty, blindness, disgrace, and old age," was alone equal to a subject which carried him beyond the bounds of the creation. His "Paradise Lost," was overlooked in the reign of Charles II. an age as destitute of the noble ideas of taste, as it was of those of virtue. Some of the small poets who lived in the sunshine of the court, and now and then produced a madrigal or a song, were much more regarded than Milton †.

Dryden was the father of true English poetry, and the most universal of all poets. This universality has been objected to him as a fault; but it was the unhappy effect of penury and dependence. * Lauder has endeavoured to prove Milton a plagiarist, not only by the grossest fraud and falsehood, but also by such rules as will prove every poet to be of that character, who wrote after Homer; and every historian, from the age of Herodotus, to the present time. To think the same thoughts, to use the same words, and even to range them in the same, or a similar order, is not always plagiarism, but the natural and the necessary result of ideal combination. Somebody, I forget whom, exclaims thus, “Periant, qui ante nos nostra dixerunt!” was the great improver of our language, and versification. The chains of our English bards were formerly heard to rattle only; in the age of Waller and Dryden, they became harmonious. He has failed in most of his dramatic writings*, of which the prologues, epilogues, and prefaces, are generally more valuable than the pieces to which they are affixed. But even in this branch of poetry, he has written enough to perpetuate his fame; as his "All for Love," his "Spanish Friar," and "Don Sebastian," can never be forgotten. There was a native fire in this great poet, which poverty could not damp, nor old age extinguish. On the contrary, he was still improving as a writer, while he was declining as a man; and was far advanced in years, when he wrote his "Alexander's Feast," which is confessedly at the head of modern lyrics, and in the true spirit of the ancients. Great injury has been done him, in taking an estimate of his character from the meanest of his productions. It would be just as uncandid, to determine the merit of Kneller, from the vilest of his paintings.

Cowley, who helped to corrupt the taste of the age in which he lived, and had himself been corrupted by it, was a remarkable instance of true genius, seduced and perverted by false wit. But this wit, false as it was, raised his reputation to a much higher pitch than that of Milton. There is a want of elegance in his words, and of harmony in his versification; but this was more than atoned for, by his greatest fault, the redundancy of his fancy §. His Latin poems, which are esteemed the best of his works, are written in the various measures of the ancients, and have much of their unaffected beauty. He was more successful in imitating the ease and gayety of Anacreon, than the bold and lofty flights of Pindar. He had many humble imitators in his Pindarics, whose verses differ as widely from his own, as the first and the last notes of a mul-

Sir WILLIAM DAVENANT, nat. 1605; 4to.

Sir William Davenant, poet-laureat in the reigns of Charles I. and II. was a man of great natural and improved talents, which he unfortunately misapplied. He distinguished himself by a bold, but unsuccessful attempt to enlarge the sphere of poetry. He composed an heroic poem, called "Gondibert," in five books, after the model of the drama; applauded himself greatly upon this invention; and looked upon the followers of Homer as a timorous, servile herd, that were afraid to leave the beaten track. This performance, which is rather a string of epigrams than an epic poem, was not without its admirers, among whom were Waller and Cowley. But the success did not answer his expectation. When the novelty of it was over, it presently sunk into contempt; and he at length found, that when he strayed from Homer he deviated from nature. Ob. 7 April, 1668, Æt. 63. See the reign of CHARLES I. and the INTERREGNUM.

Sir Aston Cockain was a native of Ashbourne in the Peak, in Derbyshire, where his ancestors had been long seated, and possessed a considerable estate; as they also did at Polesworth in Warwickshire. He studied at Oxford and Cambridge, and was a fellow commoner of Trinity college, in the latter university. Having been some time at the Inns of Court, he travelled over a great part of Europe with sir Kenelm Digby. The politeness of his manners, his love of the liberal arts, and his vein of poetry, though not of the richest and purest kind, gained him much esteem. As he was known to be of the church of Rome, and therefore deemed a malignant, he suffered as such by the iniquity of the times. This, together with his convivial disposition and neglect of œconomy, reduced him to a necessity of selling his estate at Polesworth, which was purchased by Humphrey Jennings, esq. He had, however, the prudence to reserve a competent annuity for himself. The lordship of Ashbourne was sold, after his death, to sir William Boothby, bart. He died in February, 1684, in the 78th year of his age. He was author of four plays, and poems on various subjects; and translated, from the Italian, “Dianea,” esteemed a good romance.

At this time flourished sir George Etherege, and other play-wrights, whose writings were adapted to the licentiousness of the court, and the prevailing manners of the age. Sir George was author of “Sir Fopling Flutter,” “Love in a Tub,” and “She wou’d if she cou’d.” It must however be acknowledged, that sir George was more chaste in expression than Wycherly.

JOHN OLDHAM; M. Vandergucht sc.
Before his Works, 8vo.

John Oldham was the son of a nonconforming minister, who in the time of the usurpation, was rector of Shipton in Gloucestershire. He was educated at Edmund hall in Oxford, and was some time usher of a school at Croydon in Surrey. Here he wrote his Satires against the Jesuits, occasioned by the Popish Plot, in 1678. These Satires gained him the appellation of the English Juvenal, as they have much of the indignant spirit and manner of the Roman poet. They are censured for their incorrectness ; but this seems to be the effect of that youthful fire to which they owe their excellence. He appears to have been no enemy to the fashionable vices of this reign ; and as he was of a very different turn from his father, the character of the old parson, at the end of his works, is supposed to have been designed for him. It is perhaps the most extravagant caricature that ever was drawn, and is incomparably more outré than the Menalcas of Bruyere. He died at the house of his patron, William, earl of Kingston, the 9th of Dec. 1683, in the 30th year of his age.

Though the earl of Rochester was in the highest repute as a satirist, he was but ill entitled to that distinction: his satires are not only unpolite, but grossly indecent. His poem "On "Nothing," and his "Satire against Man," are a sufficient proof of his abilities: but it must be acknowledged, that the greatest part of his works are trivial or detestable. He has had a multitude of readers: so have all other writers, who have soothed, or fallen in with, the prevailing passions and corruptions of mankind. Ob. 26 July, 1680, Æt. 33 †. See Class III.

Andrew Marvell was an admirable master of ridicule, which he exerted with great freedom in the cause of liberty and virtue. He never respected vice for being dignified, and dared to attack it wherever he found it, though on the throne itself*. There never was a more honest satirist.

† In the preface to "Thomæ Cæii Vindiciæ Antiquitatis Academicæ Oxoniensis," p. 49, is this note of T. Hearne: "Bishop Burnet makes lord Rochester to have been only something above 32 years of age; but Gadbury, in his "Almanack for 1695," tells us that he was born on April 10, 11 h. mane; 1647, and died July 26, 1680, being then somewhat above 33 years old. He says, that he received the account of his birth from his lordship himself."

* In some of the State Poems, Charles II. is ridiculed under the nick-name, of Old Rowley, which was an ill-favoured stallion kept in the Meuse, that was remarkable for getting fine colts.—Mrs. Holford, a young lady much admired by Charles, was sitting in her apartment, and singing a satirical ballad upon satirist. His pen was always properly directed, and had some effect upon such as were under no check or restraint from any laws human or divine. He hated corruption more than he dreaded poverty; and was so far from being venal, that he could not be bribed by the king into silence, when he scarce knew how to procure a dinner. His satires give us a higher idea of his patriotism, parts, and learning, than of his skill as a poet. His poem entitled, "Flecko, the English priest at Rome," is remarkable for a humorous character of that poetaster. The name of Mac-Flecko was afterwards applied by Dryden to Shadwell. He died the 16th of August, 1678. His death was generally believed to have been occasioned by poison.

This ingenious and accomplished gentleman was son of that Charles Cotton whose portrait is so finely drawn by lord Clarendon, in the excellent group of his friends, in the Memoirs of his own Life. He was educated at Cambridge, where he was esteemed one of the ornaments of that university. He was a great master of the modern languages, particularly of the French; from which, among other things, he has translated the "Horace" of Corneille, the "Life of the Duke of Espernen," and

"Old Rowley the King," when he knocked at her door. Upon her asking who was there? he with his usual good humour replied. "Old Rowley himself, madam."

Montaigne's "Essays." The last of these translations was deservedly applauded. He also translated several of Lucian's Dialogues into English, and some poems from Horace, Catullus, &c. He was author of a poem on "The wonders of the Peak," and other original pieces. The most celebrated of his works is his "Virgil Travestie," in which he so far succeeded, as to be deemed next to Butler in burlesque; but the reader, upon comparing these two authors, will find a very great disparity in their characters*. He was sociable, hospitable, and generous; but as he was far from being an œconomist, he, in the latter part of his life, was much involved in debt, and perpetually harrassed with duns, attornies, and bailiffs.

Sir RICHARD FANSHAWE translated the "Pastor Fido" of Guarini, and the "Lusiad" of Camoens †. Sir John Denham speaks thus of the former translation:

He wrote and published an epithalamium upon the duke of York and dutchefs of Inſpruck, though the marriage was never concluded: it conſiſted of ſome thouſands of verſes, together with an ample comment. THOMAS FLATMAN; Hayls p. R. White ſc. Before his "Songs and Poems," 1682. 8vo.

Thomas Flatman was one of the unſucceſſful imitators of Pindar, or rather of Cowley, in a ſpecies of poetry which pleaſed more from its novelty, than its excellence, in that celebrated writer. He compoſed Pindaric odes on the death of the duke of Albemarle, the earl of Offory, prince Rupert, and Charles II. The duke of Ormond was ſo pleaſed with that on the death of the earl of Offory, his ſon, that he ſent the author a ring, with a diamond in it, worth 100 l. It is no wonder that the heart of a father, ſoftened by the death of ſuch a ſon, felt ſomething in reading this compoſition which an indifferent person cannot even imagine; and mistook the natural working of his own breast, for the art of the poet. Flatman really excelled as an artist: a man must want ears for harmony, that can admire his poetry, and even want eyes that can cease to admire his painting. It does our author some honour, that Mr. Pope has very closely copied several of his verses, in his ode of "The dying Christian to his Soul *." See the Class of Artists.

Though Ogilvy was one of the worst poets of his time, he was without a rival in point of industry. This virtue alone, if he had had no other merit, would entitle him to some respect. He began to study at an age when men usually think of leaving off all literary pursuits; and quickly made an astonishing progress. He could scarce construe Virgil, when he entered upon a translation of that poet; and he was no less eager to translate Homer, though he was far from being a competent master of English or Greek †. That he had no success in these great attempts is not to be admired; the attempts themselves are matter of admiration. I shall pass over his “Æsop’s Fables,” and several other folios which he published, to mention his “Carolies †,” an heroic poem, in twelve books, in honour of Charles I. on which he had been long labouring. This, which he tells us, he had “resolved to be the pride, divertisement, business, and sole comfort of his “age*,” was burnt in the fire of London. His fortune was reduced, by that conflagration, to 5 l. only; but he, in a few years, retrieved his loss, by undertaking and finishing several voluminous works. His last and greatest undertaking was his “Atlas,” which was alone a sufficient task for a man’s life. Three or four volumes, in folio, have been published of this work, which he did not live to finish. It is well known that he was employed by Charles II. to take a survey of the roads of the kingdom; and I have been informed, that the posts were regulated according to that survey. Ob. 4 Sept. 1676.

* See the "Adventurer," No. 63.

† Mr. Pope, when a child, read Ogilby's "Homer" with a pleasure that left the most lasting impression upon his mind. He could even at that tender age, discern much of the majesty of the Grecian poet, through the thick clouds with which he was involved. What is truly great, or sublime, in painting or poetry, cannot easily be annihilated by a copy or a translation. If a common sign painter, were to copy Raphael's celebrated picture of St. Michael the archangel, there is no question but he would make a devil of him; but we should still see some imperfect traces of the angelic character.

Though

Though this obscure author would have us believe that his play was published, and his head engraved, more to gratify the printer than himself, he seems to have had his share of that vanity which adheres to human nature. The engraving of this head was a fortunate circumstance for his memory: he will be remembered by this, when his Play and his Poems are utterly forgotten. The former seems to have sunk into oblivion long since, as there is no mention made of it in Jacob's "Lives of the Dramatic Poets."

SAMUEL SPEED; F. Van Hove f.

Samuel Speed studied the works of Herbert and Quarles, whose books are represented in the same print with his portrait. He was only inferior to the latter in point of copiousness. He was author of a manual, in verse, entitled, "Prison Piety."

RICHARD HEAD, sitting and writing, with a globe before him, and a Satyr holding a chaplet of laurel over his head. Beneath are six verses, "The Globe's thy Study," &c. signed J. F. Sw.

Richard Head, an Irishman, was some time a member of the university of Oxford, whence he was taken for want of a competent maintenance, and bound apprentice to a bookseller in London. He was afterwards partner in trade with Francis Kirkman, of the same occupation; but neglecting his business in pursuit of pleasure, he, to avoid his creditors, returned to his native country, where he wrote "Hic et ubique, or the Humours of Dublin, a Comedy," which was privately acted in that city with applause, and printed at London, 1663. He again entered into partnership with Kirkman *, and was sometimes assisted by him in writing books for their mutual support ; particularly in “ The English Rogue.” His next considerable work is his “ Proteus Redivivus, or the Art of Wheedling or Insinuation.” In 1674, he published “ Jackson’s Recantation, or the Life and Death of the notorious Highwayman who was hanged in Chains at Hampsted ;” and, in 1678, “ Madam Wheedle, or the fashionable Miss discovered,” which are in 8vo. He also published “ Venus’s Cabinet unlocked,” and “ The floating Island, or a Voyage from Lambethiana to Ramalia †.” A book of jests and novels, entitled “ Nugæ Venales,” which would have served for a general title to his works. Roguery, fornication, and cuckoldom were the standing topics of this author, who was persuaded that his books would sell in proportion to the prevalency of these vices. He was of a lively genius, and had considerable knowledge in the scenes of low life and debauchery. Some of his pieces will naturally remind the reader of “ The London Spy,” and the “ Trips” of Ned Ward. He was cast away in his passage to the Isle of Wight, in the year 1678.

Sir HENRY OXFENDEN DE BARHAM,

* This man was noted for publishing plays, farces, and drolls. He dealt as largely in drollery of various kinds, as Curl did in bawdry and biography. Kirkman, indeed, had no objection to trading in the former commodity, if he thought it would turn the penny. He has given us memoirs of his own Life, and probably led the way for John Dunton. He also published a book called “ The Wits, or Sport upon Sport,” with his head prefixed. It is inscribed “ F. K. Citizen of London.”

Mrs. BEHN; R. White sc. 12mo. This has been copied by Colc.

Aphara Behn, a celebrated wit, was daughter of Mr. Johnson, a gentleman of Canterbury, who, in this reign, resided at Surinam, in the quality of lieutenant-general of that place. Here she became acquainted with the person and adventures of Oroonoko, whose story is well told by herself, but more feelingly in Southerne's celebrated Play *. She gave Charles II. so good an account of that colony, that he sent her to Antwerp during the Dutch war. Here she entered, with her usual spirit, into various intrigues of love and politics. She penetrated the design of the Dutch to sail up the Thames, and transmitted her intelligence to the king. But it was slighted, and even laughed at. Her plays, which are numerous, abound with obscenity; and her novels are little better. Mr. Pope speaks thus of her:

"The stage how loosely does Astræa tread,
"Who fairly puts all characters to bed!"

* The tragedy of Oroonoko was republished, with alterations, in 1759, by Dr. Hawkesworth, without his name.

The poet means behind the scenes. There is no doubt but she would have literally put them to bed before the spectators; but here she was restrained by the laws of the drama, not by her own delicacy, or the manners of the age. Sir Richard Steele tells us, that she, “understood “the practic part of love better than the speculative.” Ob. 16 April, 1689.

tions. This has been translated into Latin. James Bristow, of Corpus Christi college in Oxford, undertook to translate a volume of her philosophical works into the same language; but he was soon forced to desist from the undertaking. Such was the obscurity and perplexity of the subject, that he could not find words where he had no ideas. We are greatly surpris'd that a lady of her quality should have written so much; and are little less surpris'd that one who loved writing so well, has writ no better: but what is most to be wonder'd at, is, that she, who found so much time for writing, could acquit herself in the several duties and relations of life, with so much propriety. Ob. 1673*.

* There is a very scarce folio volume of "Letters and Poems," printed in 1678. It consists of 182 pages, filled with the grossest and most fulsome panegyric on the duke and dutchess of Newcastle, especially her grace †. I know no flattery, ancient or modern, that is in any degree, comparable to it, except the deification of Augustus, and the erection of altars to him in his lifetime †. Incense and adoration seem to have been equally acceptable to the Roman god and English goddess. This is part of a letter of thanks sent to the dutchess by Anthony Thyssius, rector of the university of Leyden, upon the receipt of her works, which she sent to the public library. "Princeps sœminini sexûs merito diceris. Abripitur fœcunda tua eruditio, per cœlos, terras, maria, et quicquid in natura vel civili vita, ullove scientiarum genere nobile occurrit. HISTORIANS.

EDWARD, earl of Clarendon, &c. M. Burghers sc. Before his "History of the Rebellion;" 8vo.

Lord Clarendon had all that knowledge of his subject, that strength of head, as well as integrity of heart, which are essential to a good historian. He has been, in some instances, accused of partiality; but this proceeded from an amiable, perhaps an invincible cause; the warmth of his loyalty and friendship. He particularly excels in characters, which if drawn with precision and elegance, are as difficult to the writers, as they are agreeable to the readers of history. He is, in this particular, as unrivalled among the moderns, as Tacitus is among the ancients. They both saw those nice distinctions, and specific differences in human nature, which are visible only to the sagacious. He paints himself, in drawing the portraits of others; and we every where see the clear and exact comprehension, the uncommon learning, the dignity and equity of the lord-chancellor, in his character as a writer. It appears from the memoirs of his own life, that he had all the virtue of a Cato; and it is no less evident that he had something of his roughness and severity. His style is rather careless than laboured.

laboured. His periods are long, and frequently embarrassed and perplexed with parentheses. Hence it is, that he is one of the most difficult of all authors to be read with an audible voice *. Ob. 9 Dec. 1674 †. See Class VI.

BULSTRODUS WHITELOCK, &c. Hulsberg sc. 8vo.

Bulstrode Whitelock, who was equally eminent for capacity and integrity, deserves a distinguished place among the writers of English history. He had a great share in those transactions of which he has given us an account; and is, in point of impartiality, at least equal, if not superior, to lord Clarendon himself. He was a man of a clear and cool head, yet zealous in the cause which he espoused: but he was very rarely misled by his affections, and was never known to be transported to bigotry. Oldmixon, who stands at the head of infamous historians, has drawn a comparison between Whitelock and Clarendon §. Ob. 28 July,

* Several of the histories of this age have a peculiar merit, as the authors were both actors and sufferers in those interesting scenes which they have exhibited to our view.

† In the second volume of the "State Papers" of lord chancellor Clarendon, lately published ‡, is a letter addressed to Dr. Gilbert Sheldon, from sir Edward Hyde, who appears in all the dignity of retirement in the island of Jersey || He says to his friend, "That you may not think I am idle, I have read over Livy and Tacitus, and almost Tully's works; and have written, since I came into this blessed life, near 300 large sheets of paper in this delicate hand." His reading the classic authors was evidently with a view of improving his style.

§ There is an anonymous pamphlet, well worth the reader's notice, entitled, "Clarendon and Whitelock farther compared." It was written by Mr. John Davys, some time of Hart-hall, now Hartford college in Oxford.

JOHN RUSHWORTH, Esq. R. White
sc. Before his "Historical Collections;" folio.

John Rushworth was bred to the law, but neglected that profession, and applied himself with great assiduity to state affairs. He was not only an eye and ear-witness, but a considerable agent in some of the most important transactions during the civil war. His "Historical Collections" are a work of great labour: but he did not only employ his industry to collect facts, but also to conceal and disguise them. His books are very useful to the readers, as well as writers of our history; but they must be read with extreme caution. It is an unhappy circumstance for an historian to write under the influence of such as cannot bear the truth. Rushworth's compilation was carried on under the eye, and submitted to the correction, of Cromwell. Hence it is, that he has omitted whatever could give offence, and inserted whatever he thought would be agreeable to his patron ||. Ob. 12 May, 1690.

† It should be observed, that Whitelock's "Memorials" are his Diary, and that he occasionally entered facts in it when they came to his knowledge; but not always on those days in which they were transacted. This has led his readers into some anachronisms. The "Memorials" would have been much more valuable if his wife had not burnt many of his papers*.

|| It is said, that Rushworth "supplied himself plentifully" from the grand collection of pamphlets made by Tomlinson the bookseller, which commenced from the latter end of the year 1640, and was carried down to the Restoration. They were uniformly bound in upwards of 2000 volumes, of different sizes, and consisted of about 30,000 tracts. Tomlinson is said to have refused four thousand pounds for this collection. William Prynne had by far the greatest hand in these pamphlets, having written above 160 of them himself. Near 100 were written by and con-

Sir PHILIP WARWICK, knt. P. Lely p. R. White sc. Before his "Memoirs," 1701; 8vo.

Sir Philip Warwick was son of Thomas Warwick, organist of St. Peter's, Westminster, of which church the former was some time a chorister. He was educated at Eton school, and finished his studies at Geneva, under the care of Diodati, well known for his Commentaries on the Scriptures. He had much the same advantages of knowledge, and was witness of many of the same facts, with the historians before-mentioned; and yields to none of them in candour and integrity. He served the worthy earl of Southampton in the office of secretary to the treasury; an employment which he had enjoyed in the former reign. He acquitted himself in this office with such abilities as did honour to them both: but the earl's enemies insinuated, that all the honour was due to the secretary, and usually called him "Sir Philip the Treasurer." The most considerable of his works is his "Memoirs, or Reflections upon the Reign of King Charles I." This book concerning John Lilburne †. More scurrility, cant, and falsehood were published at this period, than in any other of the same duration, in any age or country; so that the whole collection, if now in being, would be but of small value. The writings of Lilburne, as well as those of many other dealers in politics, and pamphleteers of the day, have been long since totally forgotten. It hath been observed, that civil heat, like drought, brings to light a multitude of noisy, troublesome, and perishable insects.

was published by Dr. Thomas Smith*, the learned writer concerning the Greek church. But the doctor's preface, of some pages, having been not altogether pleasing to the administration at that time, it has been suffered to stand in very few copies. He died the 15th of January, 1682.

NATHANAEL FIENNES, was author of several pieces relative to the civil war. See the INTERREGNUM, Class II.

JOHN MILTON was author of "The History of Britain;" a book written with a republican spirit, in a nervous style, and with much strength of reason: but we are disappointed in not meeting with any of that elegance in it which it is natural to expect from the author of the "Paradise Lost." It was printed in 4to. 1670, and is reprinted in Kennet's "Complete History." See the division of the Poets, &c.

to the Ottoman Porte. He was about eleven years consul for the English nation at Smyrna, where he wrote his "Present State of the Greek and Armenian Churches." But his capital performance is his "Continuation of Richard Knolles's excellent History of the Turks." He was, from his great knowledge of the Turkish affairs, better qualified than any other person for this work; but he is inferior to Knolles in historic merit. He also wrote a "Contiuuation of Platina's Lives of the Popes," in folio, which was published in the reign of James II. by whom he was knighted. He also translated Garcillaffo de la Vega's "Commentaries of Peru." He was, by king William, sent resident to Hamburgh, where he lived ten years*. In 1700, he returned to England, and died in November the same year. See more of him in "State Letters of Hen. Earl of Clarendon." See also the next reign.

was printed at London, in folio, 1672: it was re-printed at Leipzig, in 4to. 1676; and again at Franeker, in 4to. 1696. This book soon rendered the author's name famous throughout Europe*. It is well known that the Egyptians, like the Chinese, pretended to incredible antiquity; and had, in the list of their dynasties, extended their chronology to 36,525 years. These dynasties has been long rejected as fabulous: but Sir John Marsham has reduced them to scripture chronology, by proving them to be not successive but collateral. The learned Dr. Shuckford tells us, that "no tolerable scheme can be formed of the Egyptian history that is not, in the main, agreeing with him †." Some things advanced by our author have been contradicted, if not confuted, by men of learning. Count Hamilton, a native of Ireland, settled in France, was author of the "Memoires de Grammont," in which he, with an easy and exquisite pencil, has painted the chief characters of the court of Charles the Second, as they were, with great truth and spirit, described to him by Grammont himself,

Who caught the manners living as they rose."

The author has in his work displayed a happiness as well as accuracy, which have determinedly placed him in the first rank of the French writers.

JOHN AUBREY, Esq. F. R. S. M. Vandergucht sc. Before his "Natural History and Antiquities of Surrey;" 8vo.

His portrait in Indian ink, by Faithorne, is in the Ashmolean Museum.

John Aubrey, who was esteemed an able and industrious antiquary, was acquainted with most of the virtuosi in the reign of Charles II. He is said to have supplied Anthony Wood with a great part of the materials for both his books, and composed several curious and useful treatises himself, some of which remain unprinted in Ashmole's Museum. The most considerable of his manuscripts are his "Monumenta Britannica, or a Discourse concerning Stone-henge, and Roll Rich Stones in Oxfordshire;" and his "Architectonica Sacra, or a Discourse concerning the Manner of our Church-Buildings in England." His "Perambulation of the County of Surrey," which was begun in 1673, and ended in 1692, was published, with large additions and improvements, by Dr. Rawlinson, in 1719, in five volumes octavo. His collections for a natural history and antiquities of Wiltshire, in which he made no great progress, are in the above mentioned repository. He had a stronger tincture of superstition than is commonly found in men of his parts and learning. In his "Miscellanies," among which are some things well worth the reader's notice, is a receipt against an evil tongue *, which was formerly thought much worse than an evil eye. Ob. circ. 1700. A. Wood, whom he esteemed his friend, speaks of him as a pretender to antiquities, and as vain, credulous, and whimsical; he adds, that he was expensive to such a degree, as to be forced to sell his estate of seven hundred pounds a year, and afterwards to become a dependant on his friends for subsistence †. There seems to be a tincture of gall in this censure of the Oxford antiquary. Mr. Gough, who mentions him with respect and honour, says, that he first brought us acquainted with the earliest monuments on the "face of the country, the remains of Druidism, and of Roman, Saxon, and Danish fortifications ‡."

William Petyt, eſq. ſtudent of the Middle Temple, bencher and treaſurer of the Inner Temple, and keeper of the Records in the Tower, was born near Skipton, in Craven, Yorkſhire. This gentleman, who is an author of character, and well known for his valuable manuſcripts, now lodged in the Inner Temple library †, made a collection of parliamentary tracts, of above eighty volumes, relative to the Interregnum. They were of ſingular uſe to the compilers of the “Parliamentary Hiſtory,” in the firſt idea of it was an utter ſtranger to its importance. The friar who found the wonderful effect of ſaltpetre, ſulphur, and charcoal, little thought that he had hit upon a compoſition that would be the death of millions, and entirely change the art of war. The man who, in playing with ſome bits of glaſs in a watch-maker’s ſhop, took the firſt hint for the teleſcope, did not dream that he was leading mankind to a diſcovery of new worlds, and opening to their view the moſt aſtoniſhing part of the creation.

He was, upon his resignation of his place of keeper of the records in the Tower, succeeded, the 12th of March, 1707-8, by Richard Topham, esq. Member of parliament for Windsor; whose valuable collection of drawings is in the library at Eton College. A list of the records in the Tower, drawn up by Petyt, is in the "Cat. MSS. This is not mentioned by either of the above cited authors. The latter informs us, that he published an "Historical Narrative of the Fire of London," in 1666 §. Mr. Wood, who speaks with great contempt of his "Sphere of Gentry," tells us, "that he was a cock-brained man; that he took holy orders upon him, and became a fantastical preacher." Lloyd styles him "the learned, industrious, and ingenious Edward Waterhouse, Esq. of Sion College;" and acknowledges himself beholden to him for the account of Sir Edward Waterhouse, printed in his "State Worthies." Ob. 1670. His "Travels to the Levant," which have been translated into French and Dutch *, were published in 4to. 1636. The author of the Introductory Discourse prefixed to Churchill's "Collection of Voyages," gives but an indifferent character of this book, as to style and matter. He was author of several pieces of less note, and is supposed to have had the principal hand in the "Anima Mundi," published by his son Charles, the well-known author of the "Oracles of Reason." The former of these books contain much the same kind of philosophy with that of Spinoza. Sir Thomas Pope Blount, another of his sons, who compiled the "Censura celebriorum authorum," is a writer much more worthy of our notice. Ob. 9 Oct. 1682.

William Leybourn, who was originally a printer in London, was instrumental in preserving and publishing several of the mathematical works of Mr. Samuel Foster astronomy professor in Gresham College*. He became afterwards an eminent author himself; and it appears from his books, that he was one of the most universal mathematicians of his time †. Many treatises of practical mathematics were published by him in this reign. In the reign of William III. came forth his "Cursus Mathematicus" in folio, which was esteemed the best system of the kind extant. His "Panarithmologia, or the Traders sure Guide," contains tables ready cast up, and adapted to the use of almost all tradesmen and mechanics. It was formed upon an excellent plan of his own, which has been adopted by Mons. Bareme in France. The seventh edition was printed in 12mo. 1741.

JOHN NEWTON, a clergyman, was author of "Astronomia Britannica," a work founded upon Dr. Seth Ward's principles. See Class IV.

VINCENTIUS WING, Luffenhamienfis, in com. Rutlandiæ; natus anno 1619, die 9 Aprilis. Before his "Astronomia Britannica," 1699; fol.

The name of Wing, though he has been dead for at least a century, continues as fresh as ever at the head of our sheet Almanacks*. He was author of "The celestial Harmony of the visible World," 1651, folio; of "An Ephemeris for thirty years," a "Computatio Catholica," and several other astrological and mathematical pieces. His great work in Latin, entitled, "Astronomia Britannica," has been much commended: he proceeds upon Bullialdus's principles, and gives clear and just examples of all the precepts of practical Astronomy. His life was written by Gadbury, who informs us that he died the 20th of Sept. 1668.

* I have found nothing in chronology so problematical and perplexing as assigning the date of the death of an almanack-maker. Francis Moore has, according to his own confession, amused and alarmed the world with his predictions and his hieroglyphics for the space of 75 years||. John Partridge has been dead and buried more than once, if the printed accounts of him may be credited. But his almanack, like his ghost, "magni nominis umbra," continued to appear as usual after his decease. Vincent Wing is said to be now living, at Pickworth, in Rutlandshire, and I am referred to a book-almanack for a proof of it. This reminds me of what I have seen in one of Partridge's almanacks, in which he very gravely affirms, that he is now living, and was alive when Bickerstaff published the account of his death. It is, with due deference, proposed to Mr. Vincent Wing, to affix this motto, for the future, to his almanack, after his name:

Illum aget PENNA metuente solvi
Fama superstes. HOR.

|| Before his Almanack for 1771, is a letter, which begins thus:

"Kind Reader,

"This being the 73d year since my Almanack first appeared to the world, and having for several years presented you with observations that have come to pass to the admiration of many, I have likewise presented you with several hieroglyphics," &c.

JOSEPH

JOSEPH MOXON, born at Wakefield, August the 8th, 1627. On a label near the head, is inscribed the title of one of his books, viz. "Ductor ad Astronomiam et Geographiam, vel Usus Globi," &c. &c. 4to.

JOSEPH MOXON, &c. F. H. Van Hove sc. 12mo.

Joseph Moxon, hydrographer to Charles II. was an excellent practical mathematician. He composed, translated, and published, a great variety of books relative to the sciences. He particularly excelled in geography, and was a great improver of maps, spheres, and globes, the last of which he carried to a higher degree of perfection, than any Englishman had done before him*. Besides his treatises of Geography, astronomy, navigation, &c. he published a book of "Mechanic Exercises, or the doctrines of "Handy-Works," &c. This book, which is in two volumes quarto, is uncommon. Dr. Johnson often quotes him in his Dictionary, as the best authority for the common terms of mechanic arts. There is a pack of astronomical playing-cards invented by him, "teaching any "ordinary capacity, by them, to be acquainted "with all the stars in heaven, to know their "place, colour, nature, bigness: as also the "poetical reasons for every constellation."— He was living at the sign of the Atlas, in Warwick-Lane, 1692 †.

* William Saunders, a fishmonger, made considerable improvements in this art before Moxon. It was afterwards much improved by Rowley and Senex. See the advertisement for Rowley's globes, in the "Spectator," No. 552.

† In the reign of Charles II. a project was set on foot for uniting the Thames and the Severn, by cutting a channel of above forty miles in length; and a bill was, with that view, brought into the house of commons. Moxon drew a map for Mr. Matthews, to demonstrate that the scheme was practicable. See particulars in Yarranton's "England's Improvements," p. 64.

There is a portrait of him at Hagley, by Lely. And another, a whole length, at lord Bathurst's, at Cirencester.

William, lord Brouncker, whom bishop Burnet calls a profound mathematician, was chancellor to queen Catherine, keeper of her great seal, and one of the commissioners for executing the office of lord high admiral. Few of his writings are extant. His "Experiments of the recoiling of Guns," and his algebraical paper on the squaring of the hyperbola, are well known. He was the first president of the Royal Society; a body of men, who, since their incorporation, have made a much greater progress in true natural knowledge, than had before been made from the beginning of the world. They have carried their researches into every part of the creation, and have still discovered new wonders. Their minute enquiries have been sometimes the subject of ridicule. But the scoffers should consider, that the wings of the butterfly were painted by the same almighty hand that made the sun. Ob. 5 April, 1684, Æt. 64.

John Kersey, teacher of the mathematics, was author of "The Elements of mathematical Art, commonly called Algebra;" folio. This book was allowed, by all judges of its merit, to be the clearest, and most comprehensive system of the kind, extant in any language. Very honourable mention is made of it in the “Philosophical Transactions*.” The work was very much encouraged by Mr. John Collins, commonly called attorney-general to the mathematics †. In the Oxford Almanack for 1749. in which there is a view of Magdalen Hall; the figure is the last of the right hand group, next to Edward Leigh, esq. who is represented writing. The print was engraved by Vertue.

Robert Plot, professor of chymistry, and chief keeper of the Ashmolean Museum, in the university of Oxford, secretary of the Royal Society, Mowbray herald extraordinary, and register of the court of honours, was one of the most learned and eminent philosophers and antiquaries of his age. He is best known to the world as author of the “Natural Histories of Oxfordshire and Staffordshire;” the first of which was published in 1677, and the latter in 1686. Whatever is visible in the heavens, earth, and waters; whatever is dug out of the ground, whatever is natural or unnatural; and whatever is observable in art or science; were the objects of his speculation and enquiry. Various and dissimilar as his matter is, it is in general well connected; and his transitions are easy. His books, indeed, deserve to be called the natural and artificial histories of these counties. He, in the eagerness and rapidity of his various pursuits, took upon trust, and committed to writing, some things, which, upon mature consideration, he must have rejected. Pliny, who wrote what he believed to be true, though too often assumed upon the credit of others, has been called a liar, because he knew nothing of experimental philosophy; and Dr. Plot, because he did not know enough of it. Besides the two capital works above mentioned, he published "Tentamen Philosophicum de Origine Fontium," 1685, 8vo. and several pieces in the "Philosophical Transactions." He died the 30th of April, 1696.

† As personal weight seems to have, at least, as powerful an effect upon mankind, in matters of religion, as the weight of reason and argument; I would ask this short question: How many of the freethinkers are required to outweigh a Bacon, a Boyle, and a Newton; and how many of their books, the Boyleian lectures?

John Evelyn, the English Peirese, was a gentleman of as universal knowledge as any of his time; and no man was more open and benevolent in the communication of it. He was particularly skilled in gardening, painting, engraving, architecture, and medals; upon all which, he has published treatises. His book on the last of these sciences, is deservedly in esteem; but is inferior to that of Mr. Obadiah Walker on the same subject. His translation of "An Idea of the Perfection of Painting," written in in French by Roland Freart, and printed in 12mo. 1668, is become very scarce. His "Sculptura, or the History and Art of Chalcography, and engraving in Copper," was composed at the particular request of his friend, Mr. Robert Boyle, to whom it is dedicated *. But his great work,

* It were to be wished, that we had an improved edition of this book, and that the several accounts of prints were ranged according to the different schools of the painters *. Such an arrangement of the works of various engravers, would be of the same use in leading the curious to the knowledge of other branches of painting, as a collection of heads is in introducing them to that of portrait.—As there is a strong party on the side of dissipation, ignorance, and folly, we should call in auxiliaries of every kind to the aid of science; and those are not the most contemptible that mix pleasure with instruction, by feeding the eye, and informing the mind at the same time. I have already pointed out a method of ranging such prints as may serve to illustrate the topography and history of our own country †. I shall here add a few more hints, which may be of use to such as make general collections; and first,

Concerning English Heads.

The collector should have a considerable number of port-folios, or volumes of blank paper, of the imperial size, bound with guards or slips betwixt each leaf, to give room. From the time of Mary, he may allot a volume at least to each reign ‡, and place one or more heads in a leaf. It is usual to cut off the borders of the prints as far as the plate goes. The manuscript additions to the inscriptions may be written on the port-folios, or on pieces of paper cut to the size of each print. If the heads are placed loose in the port-folios, in order to be occasionally shifted, it will be convenient to fasten the lids with strings before, and at each end.

work, is his "Sylva; or a Discourse of Forest-Trees, and the Propagation of Timber," &c. which was the first book that was published by order of the Royal Society *. He tells us, in the second edition of that valuable work, that it had been the occasion of planting two millions of timber trees. The author, who resided chiefly at Saye Court, near Deptford, had one of the finest gardens in the kingdom, and was one of the best and happiest men in it. He lived to a good, but not an useless old age, and long enjoyed the shade of those flourishing trees which himself had planted. Ob. 27 Feb. 1705-6, Æt. 86. See Class X.

Roman antiquities may be ranged according to the method of Montfaucon; and mixed subjects may be disposed alphabetically.

* "Letters of Abraham Hill," &c. p. 108.

† Some place the scorpion among the insects, and others among the serpents. See Dr. Newton's "Milton," 4to. vol. ii. p. 253. notes.

‡ Corals and cer lines should be placed in the class of vegetables, according to Tournefort, &c. but Mr. Ellis has written an essay to prove, that the latter are produced and inhabited by the marine polypes.

§ This method was projected by the author before he knew any thing of Linnæus, to whose works the reader is referred for the best arrangement of every kind of natural productions.

Jacob

Jacob Bobart, a German, whom Dr. Plot styles an excellent gardener and botanist, was, by the earl of Danby, founder of the Physic-garden at Oxford, appointed the first keeper of it. He was author of "Catalogus Plantarum Horti Medici Oxoniensis, scil. Latino-Anglicus et Anglico-Latinus," Oxon. 1648, 8vo. One singularity I have heard of him from a gentleman of unquestionable veracity, that, on rejoicing days he used to have his beard tagged with silver. The same gentleman informed me, that there is a portrait of him in the possession of one of the corporation at Woodstock. He died the 4th of February, 1679, in the 81st year of his age. He had two sons, Tillemant and Jacob, who both belonged to the Physic-garden. It appears that the latter succeeded him in his office *.

* Dr. Zachary Grey, in his notes upon "Hudibras," vol. i. p. 125, gives us the following anecdote of Jacob Bobart the son. He says: "Mr. Smith of Bedford, observes to me, on the word dragon, as follows. Mr. Jacob Bobart, botany professor † of Oxford, did, about 40 years ago, find a dead rat in the physic-garden, which he made to resemble the common picture of dragons, by altering its head and tail, and thrusting in taper snarp sticks, which distended the skin on each side till it mimicked wings. He let it dry as hard as possible. The learned immediately pronounced it a dragon; and one of them sent an accurate description of it to Dr. Magliabechi, librarian to the grand duke of Tuscany; several fine copies of verses were wrote on so rare a subject; but at last Mr. Bobart owned the cheat; however, it was looked upon as a matter-piece of art; and, as such, deposited in the Museum, or Anatomy School, where I saw it some years after."

† I much question his being botany professor, which office has sometimes been confounded with that of the keeper of the physic-garden. See Wood's "Falli," ii. p. 109, 178.

before his translation of Friar Moultron's "Complete Bone-Setter."

This person was author of an Herbal, written much in the same manner with that of Culpepper, and published in octavo, 1664. It is entitled, "BOTANOGRAFIA, the British Physician, or the Nature and Virtue of English Plants." He calls himself in the title, Botanolog. Stud. His head is prefixed to this book. Robert Lovell was contemporary with Turner, and a botanist of superior note. He was author of "ΠΑΜΒΟΤΑΝΟΓΡΑΦΙΑ, five Enchiridion Botanicum, or a Compleat Herbal." The second edition of it was printed in 12mo. 1665*. Morison, Plukenet and Ray, were very eminent for botany in this reign.

SAMUEL GILBERT; florist; R. White sc. (1682); 12mo.

Samuel Gilbert was author of "The Florist's Vade Mecum, being a choice Compendium of whatever is worthy Notice that hath been extant for the propagation, raising, planting, encreasing, and preserving the rarest Flowers and Plants," &c. the third edition of which was printed in the reign of Anne. He was son-in-law to Rea, the publisher, or rather author, of the "Flora." This part of gardening has been greatly improved since Gilbert's time. Miller, in his "Gardener's Dictionary," and Dr. Hill, in his "Eden," have written copiously on the cultivation of flowers. Bradley has also written on this subject.

* At page 514 is an index, which may be useful to such as would know the state of botany at this time.

There is a portrait of him, at lord Sandys's, at Ombersley, in Worcestershire.

Sir John Pettus, of Cheston hall, in Suffolk, was member of parliament for Dunwich, in that county, in the reign of Charles II. He was author of "Fodinæ Regales; or the History, Laws, and Places of the chief mines and Mineral Works in England and Wales, and the English Pale in Ireland; and also of the Mint and Money; with a Clavis, explaining some difficult Words relating to Mines," &c. Lond. 1670; fol. He was also author of "England's Independency on the Papal Power," &c. Lond. 1674; 4to. "Volatiles from the History of Adam and Eve," printed at London the same year, 8vo. "Of the Constitution of Parliaments," Lond. 1680, 8vo. and of "Fleta Minor, or the Laws of Art and Nature, in knowing, judging, essaying, fining, refining, and enlarging the Bodies of confined Metals; in two Parts; translated from the German of Lazarus Ereckens, Assay-Master-General of the Empire of Germany;" 1683, fol. He gave it the title of "Fleta Minor," because he translated it in the Fleet. His head is prefixed to this book.

Soon after the Restoration, Cooper the celebrated limner is said to have been employed to draw his portrait for the king, who kept it in his closet. But Sorbriere tells us, that "his majesty shewed him a copper cut of his picture, in his closet of natural and mechanical curiosities, and asked him if he knew the face †?" The print here spoken of was doubtless that engraved by Faithorne, as that

* This date was afterwards added. Hobbes was not so old when the plate was engraved.

† Hollar, in a letter addressed to Mr. Aubrey, which is now in Ashmole's Museum, tells him, "that he shewed this print to some of his acquaintance, who said it was very like; but Stent, says he, has deceived me, and maketh demur to have it of me, as that at this present my labour seemeth to be lost; for it lieth by me." This appears to have been with a view of beating down the price. Stent was a print-seller, and is well known to have greatly undervalued the labours of Hollar.

by Hollar was done several years after the death of Sorbiere. The other heads of him appear to be copies from these two. Mr. Wood informs us, that his picture was in such esteem in France, that the virtuosi of that country came as it were on pilgrimages to see it.

Thomas Hobbes, a man of much learning, more thinking, and not a little knowledge of the world, was one of the most celebrated and admired authors of his age. His style is incomparably better than that of any other writer in the reign of Charles I. and was, for its uncommon strength and purity, scarcely equalled in the succeeding reign. He has, in translation, done Thucydides as much justice as he has done injury to Homer: but he looked upon himself as born for much greater things than treading in the footsteps of his predecessors. He was for striking out new paths in science, government, and religion; and for removing the landmarks of former ages. His ethics have a strong tendency to corrupt our morals, and his politics to destroy that liberty which is the birth-right of every human creature. He is commonly represented as a sceptic in religion, and a dogmatist in philosophy; but he was a dogmatist in both. The main principles of his "Leviathan" are as little founded in moral or evangelical truth, as the rules he laid down for squaring the circle are in the mathematical demonstration. His book on human Nature is esteemed the best of his works. Ob. 4 Dec. 1679, Æt. 92 †.

Sir

† It is well known that Hobbes was much pleased with the following epitaph, which was made for him a considerable time before his death:

Dr.

Sir WILLIAM TEMPLE; P. Lely p. J. Houbraken sc. In the Collection of John Temple, Esq. Illust. Head.

The three Graces are represented in the ornaments belonging to this portrait *.

Few authors have been more read, or more justly admired, than sir William Temple. He displays his great knowledge of books and men in an elegant, easy, and negligent style, much like the language of genteel conversation. His vanity often prompts him to speak of himself; but he and Montaigne are never more pleasing than when they dwell on that difficult subject. It is a happy circumstance for his readers, that so polite and learned a writer was also a vain one: they are great gainers by his foible. He is sometimes inaccurate; but his inaccuracies escape us unseen, or are very little attended to. We can easily forgive a little incorrectness of drawing in the paintings of a Correggio, when there is so much beauty and grace to atone for it †. Ob. Jan. 1698, Æt. 70. See Class V.

Dr. Fuller, who was a punster, would doubtless have been pleased with the next:

HERE LIES FULLER'S EARTH:

But this was made after his decease. Both are so much in the same style as to render it probable that they were by the same hand.

* "He was (says Mr. Melmoth) the first of our prose authors who introduced a graceful manner into our language."

† As we are apt implicitly to adopt, and tenaciously to retain the errors of great authors, it should be observed here, that sir William Temple, at p. 249 of his "Introduction to the History of England," speaks of the abolition of the trial of camp-fight, or duel, by William the Conqueror. This is a great mistake; for he introduced it, as appears in the Glossary to Kennet's "Parochial Antiquities," under the article BELLUM DUELLUM. See what Nicolson, in his English Historical Library," says of Temple's Introduction to our national history.

Algernon Sidney, who saw and deplored the abuses of regal power, wrote much, and, as some think, much to the purpose, for republican government. He did not only write from his judgment, he also wrote from his heart; and has informed his reader of what he felt, as well as what he knew. He was so far from thinking resistance unlawful, that he actually entered into cabals for restraining the exorbitancies of the crown. He was tried and condemned for conspiring the death of the king, by a packed jury and an infamous judge*. Only one witness appeared against him, but his papers on government were deemed equivalent to another. He had in these asserted, that power is delegated from the people to the prince, and that he is accountable to them for the abuse of it. This was not only looked upon as treason, but blasphemy against the viceregerents of Martin Clifford, master of the Charter-house, was a man of parts and a polite scholar; and lived in great intimacy with most of the wits of this reign. Dr. Sprat has dedicated to him his "Life of Cowley," who was their common friend. He was author of a "Treatise on Human Reason †, and was one of those who were said to have a hand in "The Rehearsal," to which these verses in the "Session of the Poets" allude:

† This treatise, which occasioned the publication of several pamphlets, came forth in May, 1674. "It happened that Dr. B. Laney, bishop of Ely, dined with many persons of quality, in October following, in the Charter-house; and whether he then knew that Mart. Clifford, the master, was author of it, is uncertain. However, he being then asked what he thought of that book, answered, that it was no matter if all the copies were burnt, and the author with them; knowing by what he had read in the book, that the author makes every man's private fancy judge of religion, which the Roman Catholics have for these hundred years cast upon protestantism ‖."

† Several copies of verses, which are prefixed to his book, were sent him upon the occasion.

† Sheridan, at p. 373 of his "British Education," published in 1756, says, "We have stronger reasons than ever, at this very juncture, to take care that our language be not wholly destroyed. One arises from a new-fangled custom, introduced by some late authors, of spelling words differently from their wiser predecessors, and, out of a poor ambition of shewing their learning, omitting and changing several letters under pretence of pointing out their derivation. But these gentlemen do not consider that most of these letters, which seem useless to them upon paper, or improper, are of the utmost consequence to point out and ascertain the pronunciation of words, which is already in too precarious a state; so that if this custom should continue to encrease, according to the caprice of every new writer, for a century more, the best authors we have, will by that time appear as obsolete, and as difficult to be read and understood, as Chaucer is at this day." The same author proceeds next to censure the "pernicious custom," as he calls it, of "throwing the accent as far back in our polysyllables as possible." He next speaks in very high and just terms of Dr. Johnson's "Dictionary."

This gentleman was author of the following book, which gained him a very considerable reputation: "The true English Interest: or an Account of the chief national Improvements, in some political Observations, demonstrating an infallible Advance of this Nation to infinite Wealth and Greatness, Trade and Populacy; with Employment and Preferment for all Persons;" 8vo. 1674. See a more particular account of this work in the "Philosophical Transactions," vol. ix. *

ANDREW SNAPE, inscribed, "Effigies Authoris Æt. 38, 1682." R. White del. et sc. b. sb.

Andrew Snape was serjeant-farrier to Charles II. and author of "The Anatomy of a Horse," &c. which has been several times printed in folio, with a considerable number of copper-plates. His portrait is prefixed to this book. He was father to Dr. Andrew Snape, principal master of Eton school, who distinguished himself in the Bangorian controversy. I find, from a manuscript note under this head in the Pepysian Collection, that one of the family of Snape has been serjeant farrier to the king for three hundred years past.

It is entitled, "England's Improvement by Sea and Land," &c. 1677; 4to. It contains several things well worth the reader's notice. The author, who has given some account of himself at p. 193, was a very noted projector, and met with great encouragement from several persons of distinction. Roger Coke, Esq. was author of "A Discourse of Trade," which is much commended by Yarranton. J. Gee's book on Trade and Navigation is in good esteem.

The author, who taught school in Southwark, whether he were the inventor, which he seems to have been, or only the improver of this branch of the mathematics, deserves to be rescued from oblivion.

Sir WILLIAM WOOD, marshal to the regiment of archers; long beard; 4to. mezz.

I never saw this print but in Mr. Pepys's collection. Maitland tells us, in his "History of London," that the title of Sir was given to William Wood as a compliment of his brethren archers by way of pre-eminence for his dexterity in shooting. He was author of a book with the following title: "The Bowman's Glory; or Archery revived, giving an Account of the many signal Favours vouchsafed to Archers and Archery, by King Henry VIII. James and Charles I. &c. by William Wood." 1682 †. He lies buried in the church of St. James Clerkenwell. This is part of his epitaph:

JOHANNES PARTRIDGE, Æt. 35; R. White sc. Before his “Astrological Vade Mecum,” 1679; 12mo.

As Partridge was so unfortunate as to be the butt of a celebrated wit in the reign of Anne, the ridiculous part of his character, or rather the ridicule that was thrown upon him, will be remembered when the rest of his personal history is forgotten. Mr. John Aubrey informs us, that when he had learned to read, and a little to write, he was bound apprentice to a shoemaker; and that he followed this occupation. When he was eighteen years of age, he found means to procure a Lilye’s Grammar, a Gouldman’s Dictionary, Ovid’s Metamorphosis, and a Latin Bible; and, by the help of these books, he acquired Latin enough to read the works of astrological authors in that language.

He

He next applied himself to the study of Greek, and Hebrew. He also studied physic; but was, saith my author, a shoemaker in Covent-garden in 1680. I find that he was sworn physician to Charles II. not long after; as he is styled Physician to his Majesty in the title to his translation of “Hadrianus a Mynsicht’s Treasury of Physic;” 1682. Mr. Aubrey has given us the following list of his works, which he has carried down to the year above-mentioned. “A Hebrew Calendar,” 1678; “Vade Mecum,” 1679; “Ecclesilegia, an Almanack,” 1679; another with the same title, for 1680; “The King of France’s Nativity;” “A Discourse of two Moons;” “Mercurius Cælestis,” an Almanack, for 1681; “Prodomus, a Discourse of the Conjunction of Saturn and Mars *.” He was also author of “The black Life of John Gadbury †,” &c. He lies buried in the church-yard of Mortlake in Surrey. The following inscription is engraved on his tomb:

There is an octavo print of him, different from this, with White's name to it.*

Mr. Wood informs us, that Coley was a tailor by trade, and the adopted son of Lilly *, who made him a present of the thirty-sixth impression of his "Ephemeris." This was continued by the son for many years:

There are two other portraits of him, each of which has an epigram of six verses affixed to it: one of them was engraved by Cross. I think they belong to the Interregnum.

Richard Saunders was author of “The Astrological Judgment and Practicè of Physick, deduced from the position of the Heavens at the Decumbiture of the sick Person: wherein the fundamental Grounds thereof are most clearly displayed and laid open: shewing, by an universal Method, not only the Cause, but the Cure and End of all Manner of Diseases incident to human Bodies, &c. being the thirty Years Practice and Experience of Richard Saunders, Student in Physick and Astrology;” 1677; 4to. His portrait is before this book. He was also author of a folio on physiognomy, chiromancy, moles, dreams, &c. of which various extracts and abridgments have been made, and sold by the hawkers. Physiognomy and chiromancy were more respected in the reign of Charles II. than they have been since: they were then regarded as next in dignity to their sister Astrology*.

* Mr. Evelyn has, in his “Numismata,” given us a long chapter upon physiognomy. The first book of chiromancy ever printed in England was published by George Wharton, in 1652, octavo, and dedicated to Mr. Ashmole. It is a translation from the Latin of John Rothman, M. D.

John Heydon, who sometimes assumed the name of Eugenius Theodictatus, was a great pretender to skill in the Rosicrucian philosophy and the celestial sciences. There is something truly original in his books; and he appears to have far out-canted all the rest of his brethren. His chymical and astrological works are numerous: but I shall pass over that in which he has made “A Discovery of the true Cœlum “ Terre,” and that which contains “The occult Power of the Angels of Astronomy in “ the Telefmatial * Sculptures of the Persians “ and Egyptians;” and several others equally extraordinary; and transcribe only two of their titles, namely, “The English physician’s Guide, “ or the holy Guide; leading the Way to know “ all Things past, present, and to come; to re- “ solve all manner of Questions, cure all Dis- “ eases; leading the Way to Virtue, Art, and “ Nature, and to the golden Treasures of Nature “ by Transmutation; with the Rosie Cross un- “ covered, and the Places, Temples, holy “ Houses, Castles, and invisible mountains of “ the Brethren discovered and communicated

He employed Heydon to calculate the king’s and his own nativity; and was assured that his stars had promised him great things. He was also employed by the duke in some treasonable and seditious practices, for which he was sent to the Tower; where he was more honourably lodged than he had ever been before*. He lost much of his former reputation, by telling Richard Cromwell and Thurloe, who went to him disguised like cavaliers, that Oliver would infallibly be hanged by a certain time, which he outlived several years. He married the widow of Nicholas Culpepper, and succeeded to much of his business.

† This title is taken from the second book.

* “ There was a poor fellow, says lord Clarendon, who had a poorer lodging, about Tower Hill, and professed skill in horoscopes; to whom the duke often repaired in disguise, &c.” This poor fellow, as appears from Carte’s “ Life of the Duke of Ormond,” was Heydon. JOHN, commonly called JACK ADAMS §; in a fantastic dress, with a tobacco-pipe at his girdle, standing at a table, on which lie a horn-book and Poor Robin's Almanack. On one shelf is a single row of books; and on another several boys play-things, particularly tops, marbles, and a small drum. Before him is a man genteely dressed, presenting five pieces; from his mouth proceeds a label thus inscribed: "Is she a princess?" This is meant for Carleton, who married the pretended German princess. Behind him is a ragged flatteringly woman, who has also a label at her mouth with these words: "Sir, can you tell my fortune?" At the bottom is a satirical inscription in barbarous Latin, or rather English with Latin terminations, addressed to Adams, who is styled "Jacko Cunningmanissimo," &c. &c. This print, which I never saw but in Mr. Bull's collection *, and have therefore minutely described it, is an octavo, engraved much in the manner of Skerwin.

Jack Adams, professor of the celestial sciences at Clerkenwell-Green, was a blind buzzard that pretended to have the eyes of an eagle. He was chiefly employed in horary questions, relative to love and marriage; and knew, upon proper occasions, how to sooth the passions and flatter the expectations of those who consulted him; as a man might have had much better fortune from him for five guineas than for the same number of shillings. He affected a singular dress, and cast his horoscopes with great solemnity. When he failed in his predictions, he declared that the stars did not absolutely force, but powerfully incline; and threw the blame upon wayward and perverse fate: he maintained that their tendency was intrinsically right, when they intended such things as were never verified; and that they were only wrong, as the hand of a clock made by a skilful workman, when it is moved forward or backward by any external or superior force. He assumed the character of a learned and cunning man; but was no otherwise cunning, than as he knew how to over-reach those credulous mortals who were as willing to be cheated as he was to cheat them, and who relied implicitly upon his art †.

† Astrologers are empirics in astral science, as quacks are in physic. Such was the credulity of the people at this period, that there was scarce a country town in which there was not a calculator of nativities and a caster of urine. Some, to their great emolument, united both professions, as a student in physic and astrology was, by the generality of the vulgar, esteemed much superior to a mere physician; and planetary influence was supposed to be of the greatest efficacy in human life, especially in love affairs. I have heard of a woman who married very foolishly, and had this poiz on her ring, as an apology for her ill conduct:

None can prevent
The stars intent.

It was currently reported among the people who best knew the wife, that "the stars also intended that the poor husband should be a cuckold." “The Queen’s Clofet opened,” a book of receipts in Cookery, &c. had not long been published, when there came forth “The Queen-like Clofet,” which was pretended to be much more complete than the former. Mrs. Woolley wrote “A Supplement to the Queen-like Clofet; or a little of every Thing.” Her “Ladies Delight, or a rich Clofet of Experiments and Curiosities, containing the Art of Preserving,” &c. has been several times printed. It appears from Clavel’s Catalogue, that this was published about the same time with “Digby’s Clofet opened.” Mrs. Woolley was also author of “The Gentlewoman’s Companion, or a Guide to the Female Sex; containing Directions of Behaviour in all Places, Companies,” &c. This was reprinted in 1674. The above account, which is taken from Clavel, may be true: but it is not very improbable that neither the portrait nor the books belonging to Mrs. Woolley; and such as artists. He painted history, portrait, landscape, and still-life. If he had confined his talent to one branch only, he would doubtless have arrived at much greater excellence than he did. Some of his fruit-pieces were deservedly admired. He painted several ceilings at Whitehall, which were destroyed by the fire; the battle of the giants at Sir Robert Clayton's; and the chapel at All Souls college at Oxford. His principal work is at the Theatre in that university, a performance altogether unworthy of the architect. Ob. 1680, Æt. 56.

VERRIO; Bannerman sc. In the "Anecdotes of Painting;" 4to.

Antonio Verrio, a Neapolitan, was an artist of more invention than taste, and of greater expedition than correctness. His pompous staircases and his ceilings are popularly esteemed the greatest ornaments of our villas and palaces. He excelled in painting marble steps and columns, which he took care to introduce upon every occasion. He has painted himself at Windsor, in a long periwig, among the spectators of Christ healing the sick. Ob. 1707.

REMBRANDT VAN RHYN, painter and engraver; natus 1606, ob. 1674.

This print is copied, probably by Worlidge, from the double portrait of Rembrandt and his wife. It is prefixed to the catalogue and description of his etchings, printed for T. Jefferys; 1752; 12mo. See an account of many more portraits of him in that catalogue. His head is placed here upon the authority of Vertue, who informs us that he painted at Hull in this reign.

reign*.—His portrait by himself, is at Balfrode.

Though Rembrandt excelled as a painter of history and portrait, and especially in the latter, he is much better known as an engraver. Some of his prints are deservedly famous for the excellence of the claire obscure, as it is seen in a supposed, or accidental light: others are remarkable for the extravagance of that principle. He copied nature with all its defects, as he saw it in his own country; and even this he sometimes debased, but seldom rose above it. There is a vein of good sense running through most of his works †. His print of Christ healing the sick, esteemed the most capital of his etchings, sold, some years since, for thirty guineas: his portrait of the Burgomaster Six, has sold for more. I have been credibly informed that Mr. Grose, a jeweller, who lived lately at Richmond, gave 130 l. for five only of † Some of them are extremely capricious; but we frequently see much more caprice in the collectors of his prints, than in the character of the artist. It is incredible what sums of money have been paid by connoisseurs for some of the most whimsical of his performances. These gentlemen are sometimes misled by prejudice. They have been so accustomed to use spectacles, as to have lost the natural use of their eyes. Men of good sense, though absolutely ignorant of the principles of taste, frequently judge better from the effects of the productions of the fine arts, than others do from rule and custom. The seeds of taste are implanted in mankind by nature. I have seen a country fellow, influenced by mere natural sensibility, as much struck with the sight of a wooden bust in a hatter's shop-window, as a judge of itaryary would be at the sight of the Belvedere Apollo, or the Venus of Medicis. This sensibility, corrected and matured by judgment and experience, is what constitutes true taste. Such as are void of sentiment, attempt in vain to acquire it. But how comparatively mean is that confined taste, which is limited to the rarities of art only, to that more diffusive one, which has the variety of nature for its object, and can view, with emotion, the wonders of the creation!

Mr. Methuen has sir Peter Lely and his family painted in oil by himself. His portrait, and that of his lady, painted also in oil by himself, are in the gallery at Strawberry-Hill.

Sir Peter Lely, who painted history and landscape when he first came into England, applied himself afterwards to portrait, in emulation of Vandyck. He copied the works of that admirable master with great success; but could not arrive at his excellence in copying nature. Vandyck painted what he saw before him; Lely painted his own ideas. In Vandyck's pictures we instantly see the person represented; in Lely's we see the painter. The languishing air, the sleepy eye, the cast of draperies, shew him to have been an excessive mannerist: but they shew him, at the same time, to have been an excellent excellent artist. The ladies were desirous of being drawn by his hand, as he knew how to bestow beauty where nature had been sparing. It has been justly said of him, that "he painted many fine pictures, but few good portraits." Ob. 30 November, 1680, Æt. 63. He left an estate of 900 l. per annum; and his judicious collection of paintings, prints, and drawings sold for 26,000 l.

Samuel Cooper was a disciple of his uncle Hoskins, who, though one of the best painters of his age in miniature, was far exceeded by his nephew. He is called The Vandyck in little, and is well known to have carried his art to a greater height of perfection than any of his predecessors. His excellence was limited to a head. He died in 1672, in the 63d year of his age. His wife was sister to Mrs. Eadith Pope, mother to our celebrated poet*.

† "Anecdotes of Painting."

Thomas Flatman was bred to the law, but neglected that dry and laborious study, to pursue his inclination to painting and poetry. Some of his tasteless contemporaries thought him equally excellent in both; but one of his heads is worth a ream of his Pindarics; I had almost said all the Pindarics written in this reign. His works are extremely scarce. Vertue saw a limning by him in the collection of Edward, earl of Oxford, which was so finely executed, that he has placed him upon the same level with Hoskins, and next to Cooper. Ob. 8 Dec. 1688, Æt. circ. 53. See Class IX.

GERRARD ZOUST, or (SOEST); Bannerman sc. In the "Anecdotes of Painting;" 4to. This head is in the same plate with that of old Griffier.

Gerard Zouft, a German, was deservedly famous for painting men's portraits, in which he had much more success than in women's. He was indeed too faithful a copier of nature to be much in vogue among the ladies. The low price which he received for painting a head, which was but 3 l. shews that his reputation was far below his merit. Riley was educated under him. His own portrait, by himself, is at Houghton. Its admission into the collection there is a sufficient proof of its excellence. Ob. 1681.

JOHN RILEY, an excellent painter in oil. His portrait belongs to the reign of William III.

William Wiffing, who was a disciple of Dodaens, a history painter at the Hague, was for some time, employed under sir Peter Lely, whose manner he imitated. Upon the death of that artist, he became the painter in vogue, especially among the ladies. He is said to have always caught the beautiful likenesses; and if any of the sex who sat to him had too much paleness in her countenance, which is frequently the effect of long sitting, he took her by the hand, and danced her about the room, to add life and spirit to her beauty. He painted the portraits of the royal family.

ROBERT WALKER. See the INTER-REGNUM.

Mr. GIBSON, in the same plate with his wife; Walker sc. In the “Anecdotes of Painting;” 4to.

Richard Gibson, commonly called the Dwarf, to distinguish him from his nephew, William Gibson, was a disciple of De Cleyn, master of the tapestry works of Charles I. He was page of the back-stairs to that prince, and so much in his favour, that he did him the honour to give him his little wife in marriage. He improved himself in his art under sir Peter Lely, whose manner he successfully imitated. The princesses Mary and Anne, who became afterwards queens of Great Britain, were taught to draw by him: he went over to Holland on purpose to instruct the former. He sometimes painted historic pieces, but applied himself chiefly to portraits. He did that of Cromwell several times. Ob. 23 July, 1690. See Mrs. GIBSON, in the next class.

NICOLAUS DE LARGILLIERE; ipse p. Chateau sc. sh. There are also prints of him by Depuis and Desrochers.

N. de LARGILLIERE, his wife and two children; ipse p. Becket f. mezz. large h. sh.

Largilliere, a Frenchman, was a portrait painter of eminence in this, and the next reign. He was persuaded by Le Brun to settle at Paris, though much inclined to fix at London. He was an intimate friend of Rigaud, who is said to have been his competitor as a painter. He died at Paris, in 1746, aged about ninety. He was employed by sir John Warner, and several other persons, some of whom were of the first distinction*. Mr. Walpole mentions the original from which the family-piece above described is taken. The print is very scarce.

CLAUDE LE FEVRE; Chambars sc. In the "Anecdotes of Painting."

Claude Le Fevre, who was also a Frenchman, studied under Le Sueur and Le Brun. His genius led him chiefly to portrait, in which branch of painting he was eminent in his own country. He seems to have been but a short time in England.

JOHN HAYLS; Hoskins p. a small oval; in the same plate with Le Fevre.

Though the name or the works of Hayls are very little known, he is said to have been a rival of sir Peter Lely. His greatest excellence was in copying Vandyck. Ob. 1679.

* The prints of James II. and his queen after Largilliere are well known.

JOHN GREENHILL; ipse p. Bannerman sc. 410.

John Greenhill was one of the most promising disciples of sir Peter Lely, under whom he made so sudden and great a proficiency, that he regarded him as a very formidable rival. He was snatched away in the midst of his career by death, which was imputed to his too free living. Mrs. Behn, who was a greater admirer of his handsome person, than of his excellence as a painter, and was supposed to have had a tender attachment to him, wrote an elegy on his death. General Cholmondeley has a half length portrait of him, in which a judicious eye might discern the different styles of Vandyck and Lely. He did a portrait of bishop Ward, which is now in the town-hall at Salisbury. He etched the head of his brother, an ingenious young man, of whom mention has been made in the preceding class*. Ob. 19 May, 1676.

WILLIAM FAITHORNE, portrait painter. See the division of Engravers.

This artist was employed by Lely, Riley, and Kneller, to paint their postures. He drew some good designs for tapestry, and painted several portraits. Ob. 1691.

Sir RALPH COLE, Bart. Lely p. F. Place f. b. sb. mezz.

There is a small head of him in the "Anecdotes of Painting."

* See the "Anecdotes of Painting."

This gentleman painted a portrait of Thomas Wyndham, esq. from which a mezzotinto print has been engraved.—It appears from a manuscript letter of the reverend and learned Thomas Baker, B. D. of St. John's college, Cambridge, to Mr. Hearne, that “ Sir Ralph Cole, when very young, was taught to paint by Vandyck ; and that he had also a strange genius for mechanical arts.” I am credibly informed, that he retained several Italian painters in his service, at the expence of five hundred pounds a year ; and that he spent his fortune by his rage for painting*.

PAINTERS in various BRANCHES.

GERARD EDEMA; in the same plate with Zouft, &c. In the “ Anecdotes of Painting ;” 4to.

Gerard Edema, a native of Amsterdam, came into England about the year 1670. He was famous for painting landscapes, in which he exhibited a great variety of horrid and uncultivated scenes ; such as rocks, mountains, precipices, cascades, cataracts, and other wildnesses of savage nature. He went to Norway and Newfoundland on purpose to collect subjects. Ob. circ. 1700.

ADRIAN VAN DIEST; small; in the same plate with Le Piper.

Adrian Van Diest, a Dutchman, was a landscape painter of considerable note. He came into England in this reign, where he spent the greatest part of his life. He drew many views on the sea-coasts, and in the western parts of the kingdom. His clouds and distances are generally well painted. As he met with less encouragement than he deserved, he slighted some of his pieces. Several of them have uncommon merit. Ob. 1704, Æt. 49. The head may be placed in either of the following reigns.

WILLIAM VANDE VELDE, junr.
Kneller p. T. Chambers sc. 4to.

William Vande Velde, father and son, were classic artists in painting every thing that has any relation to the sea. The father was never rivalled but by his son*; the son is without a rival in any age or nation. They were both retained in the service of Charles II. who understood and sufficiently valued their admirable works. The elder Van Velde was employed in subjects worthy of his hand. He has perpetuated the most lively representation of several of the sea-fights in this reign, which are scarce to be paralleled in the history of mankind. The younger was at sea [what Claude Lorraine was at land; but his pencil was incomparably more copious and diversified. There is a well chosen collection of his paintings in the possession of Mr. Skinner, in Clifford-street, Burlington Gardens. See the reign of JAMES II.

ABRAHAMUS HONDIUS, pictor;

ABRAHAM HONDIUS; ipse p. Chambers sc. In the "Anecdotes of Painting; 4to."

* At Bullstrode is an excellent sea-piece in oil, by the elder Vander Velde: it is in the manner of a drawing with Indian ink. He was seventy-four years of age when he did it.

Abraham Hondius, a native of Rotterdam, is very justly celebrated for painting of animals. He was excelled by Rubens and Snyders, who stand alone in this branch of their art: but his best pieces are very little inferior to the style of these capital masters. He also painted history, landscape, candle-lights, and hunting-pieces. Mr. Walpole informs us, that his finest picture is a dog-market, sold at Mr. Halsted's auction 1726. Ob. 1695.

THOMAS WYCK; in the same plate with John Wyck, his son; Bannerman sc. 4to.

Thomas Wyck, who was born at Haerlem in Holland, followed the manner of Peter Van Laer, commonly called Bamboccio. He painted landscape, sea-ports, and other views; and particularly excelled in chymical laboratories. I saw lately, in Berkshire, an excellent view of London on fire, by the hand of this artist. Ob. 1682.

JOHN WYCK, son of the former, excelled in landscapes and hunting-pieces, and was deservedly celebrated for his dogs and horses; in which branches of painting Wootton, his disciple, was also excellent. There are some good pieces by the latter in the hall at Longleat. Ob. 1702.

GRIFFIER; in the same plate with Zouft, &c. Bannerman sc.

John Griffier, commonly called Old Griffier, was better known abroad by the appellation of the Gentleman of Utrecht, though a native of Amsterdam. He was a good painter of perspective views, and noted for his landscapes, which he enriched with buildings and figures. His colouring was uncommonly neat. He excelled in copy-copying the works of Flemish and Italian masters. He etched several prints of birds and beasts, after the designs of Francis Barlow. He died in 1718, at upwards of 72 years of age.

EGBERT HEMSKIRK; small; in the same plate with Riley. In the "Anecdotes of Painting."

Egbert Hemskirk was a noted painter of drunken revels, wakes, fairs, quakers meetings, and waggish subjects. Some are much delighted with his paintings; but they are generally such as would prefer Martial to Virgil. In Bourne's Poems is a copy of verses on his picture of two Dutchmen looking with a sorrowful countenance into an empty pot; and also on that of the players at put, which was engraved by Smith. Ob. 1701.

DANIEL BOON, playing on the violin; mezz.

This man was also a buffoon painter, and much of the same character with Hemskirk. He died in 1700.

PETER ROESTRATEN; a pipe in his right-hand, and a rummer-glass of liquor in his left. A. Bannerman sc. In the "Anecdotes of Painting;" 4to.

Peter Roestraten, a Dutchman, was a disciple of Francis Hals. He painted little besides still life, in which he excelled. There is an excellent picture by him at Belvoir-Castle, the seat of the duke of Rutland. It exhibits a watch, a book, a tankard, and several other things. The tankard is finely executed.

VAN

VAN SON; Bannerman sc. In the “Anecdotes of Painting ;” 4to.

Van Son, or Vanzon, who was bred under his father, a flower painter at Antwerp, was a copious painter of still-life. His pictures are composed of oranges, lemons, damask curtains, plate, and a great variety of other objects. Pieces of this kind were more valued in the reign of Charles II. than they are at present. Ob. 1700.

ALEXANDER BROWNE; J. Huyfmans p. A. de Jode sc. b. sb.

Alexander Browne was author of “Ars Pictoria, or an Academy, treating of Drawing, Painting, Limning, and Etching,” 1669, folio; to which is prefixed his head. He, in the title, styles himself Practitioner in the Art of Limning. It appears from the encomium of Payne Fisher, before this treatise, that he engraved the thirty plates at the end of it*. Some of them are taken from Bloemart’s fine drawing-book, and they are well copied. Many of our old mezzotintos have this inscription, “Sold by Alexander Browne, at the Blew Balcony in Little Queen-Street.” As there is seldom the name of any engraver to the prints said to be sold by him, it is very probable that some of them were done by his own hand †.

FRANCIS LE PIPER, in the same plate with Van Dieft. In the “Anecdotes of Painting.”

* These verses are part of the encomium :

“Debentur tum Browne tuis quot ferta capillis †

“Qui tot femineces artes in luminis auras

“Duxisti, propriaque manu cœlata novasti

“Artificum simulacra lenum.”

† Alex. Browne fecit, is inscribed on a mezzotinto of Charles II.

Francis

Francis Le Piper, the son of a gentleman in Kent, was designed for merchandize; but was of too mercurial a disposition, and too great a lover of pleasure, to fix to any profession. He was a singular humorist, and was remarkable for rambling over the greatest part of Europe on foot. When he had a mind to take a tour to the Netherlands, France, Spain, or Italy, he very abruptly left the kingdom, without the privity of his friends. He had an excellent talent for designing, and took a particular pleasure in drawing ugly faces. It was reckoned dangerous for a man who had any singularity of aspect to be in his company, as he would retire after he had sufficiently viewed him, and sketch out the perfect likeness of his features. Wine was the element in which he lived; and the greatest part of his pieces were drawn at the tavern, over a bottle. After he had dissipated his patrimony, he took money for his works. He did the drawings for several of the heads in sir Paul Rycaut's "History of the Turks;" and some designs for Becket, who executed them in mezzotinto. Ob. 1698. See more of him in Graham's "Essay towards an English School." at the end of De Piles's "Lives of the Painters."

12mo.

"The Hogarth of poetry, says Mr. Walpole, was a painter too." He did but few things; yet there is no question but the genius of painting was greatly assisting to the comic muse. It is observable, that Hogarth's first public specimen of his talent for humorous pieces, was a set of prints which he designed for a new edition of "Hudibras." This was his best method of studying that admirable burlesque poem*.
new

SYLVANUS MORGAN, Æt. 41; falling band.

Sylvanus Morgan, who had been bred a blacksmith, was an arms painter, and the reputed author of a book of heraldry, entitled, "The Sphere of Gentry." Mr. Wood informs us, from the authority of sir William Dugdale, that it was composed by Edward Waterhouse, esq. See the article of WATERHOUSE, among the Antiquaries.

Mrs. BEALE and her son CHAREES; Mary Beale p. T. Chambers sc. In the "Anecdotes of Painting;" 4to.

Mrs. Mary Beale, daughter of Mr. Cradock, minister of Walton upon Thames, was instructed in the art of painting by sir Peter Lely, who was a professed admirer of her genius, and was thought to have a tender regard for her person. She painted portraits in oil, water-colours, and crayons; and acquired a good deal of the Italian style, by copying the works of eminent masters of that country. She painted more portraits of the dignified clergy than any of her contemporary artists. Her price was 5*l.* for a head, and 10*l.* for a half-length. Mrs. Diana Curtis, first wife of Benjamin, late bishop of Winchester, was a scholar of Mrs. Beale and her son*. The former died the 28th of Dec. 1697, in the 65th year of her age.

Charles Beale painted in oil and water-colours: but a weakness in his eyes occasioned his quitting his profession, after he had followed it four or five years.

Anne, daughter of Dr. Killigrew, master of the Savoy, was maid of honour to the dutchess of York. She was a lady of fine accomplishments both of body and mind, and celebrated by Mr. Dryden for her painting and poetry. Her wit was deservedly admired; but it received part of its currency from her beauty. She painted landscape, portrait, and history †. This shews the fertility of her genius, which had not time to rise to maturity, as she died at the age of twenty-five. The print before her poems is evidently in the style of sir Peter Lely. It appears, from Mr. Dryden's ode to her memory, that she drew the pictures of the duke and dutchess of York. Ob. 1685.

* Mrs. Hoadly, widow of the bishop of Winchester, had several portraits of her painting, which do her much honour.

SCULPTORS.

CIBBER; A. Bannerman sc. 4to. In the "Anecdotes of Painting."

Caius Gabriel Cibber, an artist of merit, came into England a little before the Restoration. He, in a few years, became so eminent, that he was appointed statuary and carver to the king's closet. Most of the statues of the kings in the Royal Exchange are of his hand; but these are not by far so well executed as the figures of Melancholy and Raving Madness before the hospital of Bedlam, which are his capital performances. They were probably taken from the life. He did two of the bas-reliefs on the pedestal of the monument, and several good pieces of sculpture at Chatsworth. He built the Danish church in London, where he lies buried with his second wife, descended from the family of Colley in Rutlandshire. This lady, who brought her husband a fortune of 6000*l.* was mother of our late laureat. The monument for Caius Cibber and his wife was erected in 1696.

WILLIAM EMMET, who was no extraordinary artist, was sculptor to Charles II. before the celebrated Gibbons. There is a very indifferent mezzotinto of him, done by himself.

GRINLING (OR GRINLIN) GIBBONS. His portrait belongs to the reign of William III.

ARCHI-

ARCHITECTS.

Sir CHRISTOPHER WREN built the church of St. Stephen Walbrook in this reign, which was sufficient to establish his reputation as an architect. He may rather be said to have extended his fame by building St. Paul's, than to have raised it to a greater height. Mr. Evelyn, who was personally acquainted with him, has given us a just idea of his great and various talents in the following passage, which I shall transcribe from the Epistle to the Reader, before his translation of Freart's "Idea of the perfection of Painting;" a book but little known, and very rarely to be met with. Speaking of the famous Bernini, he says, "Not many years since, he is reported to have built a theatre at Rome, for the adornment whereof he not only cut the figures and painted the scenes, but writ the play, and composed the music, which was all in recitativo: and I am persuaded that all this is not yet, by far, so much as that miracle of our age and country, Dr. Christopher Wren, were able to perform, if he were so disposed, and so encouraged; because he is master of so many admirable advantages beyond them." See the above mentioned book. His portrait belongs to the reign of Anne.

Sir BALTHASAR GERBIER, of whom some account has been given in the reign of Charles I. was promised, as he tells us himself, the place of surveyor-general of the works, upon the decease of Inigo Jones. After the death of Charles, he was very attentive to the business of his academy, which he had erected at Bethnal-green “and exercises*.” Butler has ridiculed this academy, in his fictitious “Will of Philip earl of Pembroke†;” who bequeaths “all his other speeches, of what kind soever, to the academy, to help Sir Balthasar’s art of well-speaking.” As this project did not answer his expectation, he went to Surinam in the time of the usurpation, and is supposed to have returned to England with Charles II. as he is said to have designed the triumphal arches erected for the reception of that prince. In 1663, he published a small treatise, entitled, “Counsel and Advice to all Builders:” to which he has prefixed no less than forty dedications. He died at Hempsted Marshal, the seat of lord Craven, of which he drew the plan, and lies buried in the chancel of the church. See the reign of Charles I. Class V. and X. See also the “Anecdotes of Painting.” A print has lately been engraved by Walker from the picture of his family, mentioned in the former reign.

some of his admirable works, of which there is an elegant volume engraved by Vertue. Abraham, who was bred to learning, was intended for the church; but he chose to pursue the bent of his genius. He was some time retained in the service of Christina, queen of Sweden, who presented him with a gold chain and medal. Charles II. who intended to create an order of knighthood, in commemoration of his escape after the battle of Worcester, under the appellation of The Order of the Royal Oak, employed Abraham Simon to make for that purpose a model in wax of a medal, which was to have been executed in gold. The king, who approved of his performance, rewarded him with an hundred broad pieces. He was employed by the duke of York to make another model of his own head; but being informed that he intended to give him only fifty pieces, he, with indignation, crushed the figure betwixt both his hands, and entirely defaced it. This was injurious to his reputation. He afterwards lived in obscurity; but still retained his pride with his poverty. His whimsical attachment to the garb which he wore in his youth is remarkable. He adhered to the same mode of wearing his hair, beard, cloak, boots and spurs, which prevailed in the reign of Charles the First. He died soon after the Revolution,

WILLIAM FAITHORNE; ipse p. Bannerman sc. copied from the first. In Mr. Walpole's "Catalogue of Engravers."

There is a softness and delicacy, as well as strength and beauty, in the best works of Faithorne, which are not to be found in those of any other English engraver. Nothing is more common than for people not to see what is before their eyes: the merit of this admirable artist was not attended to, before it was pointed out by Mr. Walpole. The portraits of Sir William Paston, John, v. count Morfaunt, Frances Bridges, countess of Exeter, Margaret Smith, Thomas Stanley, and John La Motte, esquires, are among his best performances. The historical prints in Westley's "Life of Christ" are said, in the title of that book, to be done "by the excellent hand of William Faithorne:" but the generality, at least, are altogether unworthy of him. I have been informed, that most of them were done for a mass-book in the reign of James II. William Faithorne the son, who performed chiefly in mezzotinto, has been often confounded with his father. Walter Dolle was a scholar of the latter, but he was a workman of a much lower class*. Faithorne the elder died 1691.

Peter Vandrebanc, a native of Paris, came into England about the year 1674. He was deservedly admired for the softness of his prints, some of which are of an uncommon size. These, though they helped to encrease his reputation, helped also to ruin him, as the profit of the sale was by no means answerable to the time and expence he bestowed upon them. Charles II. James II. and his queen, sir Edmund Bury Godfrey, &c. are on large sheets, and finely executed. The head of John Smith, a writing-master, done from an original by Faithorne, is one of his best portraits. He etched the cieling by Verrio, in the drawing-room at Windsor. But the most valuable of his works is his excellent print of Christ praying in the garden, after Sebastian Bourdon. The account of him in the "Anecdotes of Painting" was communicated to Mr Vertue by his youngest son, a poor labourer.

ROBERT WHITE; Bannerman sc. In Mr. Walpole's "Catalogue of Engravers;" 4to. There are several other heads in the same plate.

Robert White, a disciple of Loggan, is supposed to have engraved more frontispieces to books than any other artist. Many of his portraits are deficient in point of neatness; but that is more than compensated by the truth of his drawing, in which he was never exceeded. I have transcribed the following singular encomium of him, from "The Life and Errors of "John Dunton*," bookfeller, written by himself. "Mr. White exceeds all I have ever met "with, in taking the air of a face. He drew "for me the picture of Mr. Doolittle, and he "gained much reputation by it; but his mas-

Vansomer did a considerable number of plates after sir Peter Lely. His works, which are in no great esteem, except for the rarity of some of them, consist of etchings, mezzotintos, and engravings. He was living in 1690. Richard

WILLIAM ELDER; in the same plate with Robert White.

William Elder, a Scotsman, engraved several heads in sir Paul Rycaut's "History of the "Turks." His portrait of Ben Johnson, prefixed to one of the folio editions of his works, is his best performance.

ALEXANDER BROWNE, limner, engraver, and print-feller. See the division of the Painters.

PIERCE TEMPEST, engraver and print-feller. See the reign of JAMES II.

ARTHUR SOLY was much employed by Robert White, who drew his head in black lead. In 1683, a print was engraved from this drawing. Soly did prints of Richard Baxter and Tobias Crisp. See the "Catalogue of Engravings," 2d edit. p. 110.

Prince RUPERT is celebrated for the invention of mezzotinto, of which he is said to have taken the hint from a soldier scraping his rusty fusil. It is also said that the first print of this kind ever published was done by his highness; it may be seen in the first edition of Evelyn's "Sculptura †." The secret is said to have been soon after discovered by Sherwin the engraver, who made use of a loaded file for laying the ground.

* This print was done by Smith in 1689, and is, by some, supposed to represent one of Becket's family, and not that artist himself. In Mr. Mac Ardell's Catalogue, quoted before, it is called "Isaac Becket, Smith's master."

† A good impression of this print is valuable.

The prince, upon sight of one of his prints, suspected that his servant had lent him his tool, which was a channelled roller; but upon receiving full satisfaction to the contrary, he made him a present of it. The roller was afterwards laid aside, and an instrument with a crenelled edge, in shape like a shoemaker's cutting knife, was used instead of it †. The glass drops invented by him are well known. He also invented a metal called by his name, in which guns were cast; and contrived an excellent method of boring them, for which purpose a water-mill was erected at Hackney-Marsh, to the great detriment of the undertaker, as the secret died with the illustrious inventor. He communicated to Christopher Kirby, from whom the present Christopher Kirby ‡ is descended, the secret of tempering the best fish-hooks made in England. See Class I. and VII. in this reign, and also Class I. in the preceding.

W. VAILLANT; in the same plate with Vandrebanc, &c. In Mr. Walpole's "Catalogue of Engravers;" 4to.

† It should not be forgotten, that sir Christopher Wren is said to have been the inventor of mezzotinto. It is certain that there is a black-a-moor's head by him, in a different manner from that of prince Rupert. Vertue, in a manuscript in my possession, mentions "A large head, something like mezzotinto: some tender parts," says he, "are done with several chasing and friezing tools. Some of the darkest parts are grounded like mezzotinto, and seraped. It is thus inscribed: "Amelia Elisabetha, D. G. Hassiæ, &c. Landgrav Comitissa Hannov. Ad vivum a se primum depictam. novoque jam sculpturæ modo expressam, dicat consecratque L.—n S. anno 1643." He refers to Sandrart's "Lives of the Painters," where, he says, "there is an account of this man's being the inventor of mezzotinto." He adds, "In lord Harley's collection of heads, is one of this lady," says Mr. Wanley; there is also a head of the Comtesse Hesse, by the same hand, who was the person that taught prince Rupert."

Warner,

Warner, or Wallerant, Vaillant a painter, was of singular service to prince Rupert in putting his new invention of mezzotinto in practice, came into England with him, soon after the Restoration. He also made considerable improvements upon this invention, as appears from his own, and his wife's portrait, a curious print of their family, and a head of Frobenius the printer, after Hans Holbein. He sometimes painted in black and white. He died in Holland.

FRANCIS PLACE; in the same plate with Vandrebanc, &c.

Francis Place was a gentleman of Yorkshire, who painted, designed, and etched for his diversion. He also did several portraits in mezzotinto; particularly that of Richard Sterne, archbishop of York; and Henry Gyles, a glass-painter of the same city. "He had an excellent hand at etching, as appears from his prints after Barlow. I have a set of twelve etchings, executed from designs of that painter, now lying before me: seven of them were done by Mr. Place, and the rest by old Griffier. They are dedicated to Richard, lord Maitland, eldest son of the earl of Lauderdale, whom he styles the Mæcenas of painting. His prints, especially his portraits, are very uncommon. Ob. 1728.

WILLIAM LODGE; in the same plate with Vandrebanc.

William Lodge was a gentleman who engraved, and sometimes painted, for his amusement. He drew and etched various views in Italy and England. He also etched the heads in Giacomo Barri's "Viaggio Pittoreasco," which he he translated; some prospects of the cloathing towns in Yorkshire for Thoresby's "Ducatus Leodiensis," and several places of natural history for Dr. Martin Lister. Ob. 1689.

• There are several persons of rank and eminence now living, who amuse themselves with etching and engraving. Lord Townshend has done several good caricaturas †. The countess dowager of Carlisle has etched several prints from Rembrandt, Salvator Rosa, Guido, and other celebrated masters. The late general Guise was so taken with some of her pieces, that he asked, and obtained a complete set of them. Lord Newnham has etched several landscapes and views about Stanton-Harcourt, with great freedom and taste. Mr. Irby, son of lord Boston, has also etched, with taste and skill, a view of Hedfor church in Buckinghamshire ‡, and other pieces. Lady Louisa Greville, daughter of the earl of Warwick, has etched several landscapes that well deserve a place in any collection; as do several heads etched by Mrs. Elizabetha Bridgetta Gulton, wife of Joseph Gulton, esq. of Ealing-Grove, in Middlesex; particularly the portraits of Dr. Francis Courayer, after Hamilton, and the second which she has done of Mr. Gulton, after the same painter. Miss Hartley, daughter of the late Dr. Hartley, of Bath, who has etched Jediah Buxton, and other pieces, deserves also to be mentioned. Sir William Musgrave has also etched several landscapes with uncommon spirit, from drawings of Bolognese, and the late lord Byron. The Rev. Mr. Richard Byron, brother to the present lord Byron, has copied Rembrandt's famous landscape of the three trees, in so masterly a manner, that it has passed in a sale for the original print. This gentleman, who excels in drawing, has done several other things, some of which are of his own invention. Mr. Mafon's exact etching of his late learned and ingenious friend Mr. Gray, merits distinction; as does also his own portrait, etched by C. Carter §, after Vassiet. The just outline and high finishing of some of the prints of captain William Baillie, done after pictures, and the character and spirit of others,

JOSEPH ROTIER, cydevant graveur de la monoye de Charles II. d'Angleterre.

This print was done when he was in the service of Lewis XIV.

There were three bothers of the name of Rouer; John, Joseph, and Philip, who were employed as engravers of coins and medals to Charles II. The celebrated Simon, who had served the Republic and Cromwell in the same capacity, was displaced, and the two first of from drawings, have been justly admired. He has, in some of his works, blended mezzotinto and etching with great success. There needs no other proof of his abilities than the portrait of Witenbogaard*, or the banker, commonly known by the appellation of the gold weigher, which is one of the finest, as well as the most scarce and valuable of the prints of Rembrandt †. The late Mr. Peter Stephens, a gentleman of an easy fortune, has taken a great number of drawings of picturesque scenes, and other remarkable views in Italy. Of these he has published two volumes of etchings, several of which he executed himself, and has subjoined to each view, an historical account of the place. I have seen a large half sheet print by him of the beautiful spot where Horace's villa was anciently situated ‡. Dr. Wall, of Worcester, who wanted only leisure to excel in painting and engraving, as he does in physic, has etched several good prints from his own designs. The Rev. Mr. Tyfon, fellow of Corpus Christi college, in Cambridge, and Mr. Orde, late of King's, in the same university, merit a place in this detail for several portraits. Dr. Hill engraved several of the prints in his "Eden, or Compleat Body of Gardening." I have been informed that Dr. Dillenius, late professor of Botany at Oxford, did several plates in his book of Mosses, himself, because the specific differences of those vegetables were too minute to be distinguished by the eyes of ordinary engravers. Dr. Gregory Sharpe, late master of the Temple, etched several prints in the "Syntagma Dissertationum" of Dr. Hyde, lately published.

* Or Witenbogaard.

† Captain Baillie has engraved prints after various masters. Fifty of them were not long since published, in one volume. The captain is now intent upon another volume, of which I have seen several beautiful specimens §, especially his Imitations of Drawings. I am well assured that his prints have sold at much higher prices in Dutch auctions, than they have ever sold for in England.

Dr. John Wilson, who, as Mr. Wood informs us, was an admirable lutanist, and the most noted musician in England, in the reign of Charles I. was gentleman of the chapel, and musician in ordinary to that prince. In 1656 he was constituted music professor in the university of Oxford. Upon the return of Charles II. he was restored to his former places, and also appointed one of the choir in Westminster abbey.—He turned a considerable part of the “Eikon Basilike” into verse, and set it to music: he also set and published a great variety of songs and ballads, divine services, and anthems, of which the Oxford antiquary has given us an account. In the archives of that university, is preserved a manuscript by him, which contains musical compositions adapted to several odes of Horace, and other pieces of Henry Purcell, the celebrated author of the "Orpheus Britannicus," began early to distinguish himself in music. As his genius was original, it wanted but little forming; and he rose to the height of his profession, with more ease than others pass through their rudiments. He was made organist to Westminster-abbey, in the latter end of this reign. In that of William, he set several songs for Dryden's "Amphitryon," and his "King Arthur, or the British Worthy;" which were received with just applause. That great poet, who thought the defects of his own compositions abundantly supplied by those of Purcell, has pronounced him equal to the best masters of music abroad*:

* See the dedications to the "Amphitryon," and "King Arthur."

Other poets, besides Dryden, have been greatly indebted to this celebrated composer, as appears from the following lines:

To Mr. Henry Purcell.

"The whole poetic tribe's oblig'd to you;
"For surely none but you, with equal ease,

His notes, in his operas, were admirably adapted to his words, and so echoed to the sense, that the sounds alone seemed capable of exciting those passions which they never failed to do in conjunction. His music was very different from the Italian: it was entirely English; it was masculine. He died the 21st of Nov. 1695, in the thirty-seventh year of his age, and was buried in Westminster-abbey. "He is gone," says the author of his epitaph, "to that blessed place, where only his harmony can be exceeded*." John Playford, who kept a music shop near the Temple-gate in London, was author of "An Introduction to the Skill of Music," published in 1655, and often re-printed. Mr. Wood informs us, that he was assisted in this work by Charles Pidgeon, of Gray's Inn, and that he was indebted for a considerable part of it to Thomas Motley's "Introduction to Music," printed in folio, 1597*. The latter editions of it have the manner and order of performing divine service in cathedral and collegiate churches, subjoined to them. He was editor of "The Book of Psalms and Hymns in Metre, with all their usual and proper tunes," &c. This was corrected by Henry Purcell, and was sometimes bound with the "Book of Common Prayer." THOMAS WESTON; R. White sc. 1682; b. 8b.

Thomas Weston was author of a book of writing and drawing, and, I think of a treatise of arithmetic: quære. He has been confounded with James Weston, a much later author, who published "A new Method of Short-Hand;" which has been several times printed. At the conclusion of his advertisement to

Svo. Before his "Arts Advancement.,"

This author endeavoured to improve upon Jeremiah Rich's scheme, in his "Pen plucked from an Eagle's Wing." But he was more successful in his "Arts Advancement, or an exact Method of Short-Hand;" founded on a plan of his own. His last treatise, entitled, "La Plume volante," is his master-piece. He was by many supposed to have carried this art to a higher degree of perfection than any of his predecessors. His "Short-Hand improved" has been lately reprinted. He was famous for writing much in a little compass; for which Biddlecomb, who belonged to the choir at Salisbury, and several others, have been noted.

* His portrait may be placed in either of the two following reigns.

Samuel Botley was author of "Maximum in Minimo, or Mr. Jeremiah Rich's Pen's Dexterity completed," 1674. This book is entirely engraved.

WILLIAM HOPKINS; Drapentier sc.

William Hopkins, teacher of the art of shorthand, was author of a book, entitled "The Flying Penman," 1674, 12mo.

There is a print of ZEBELINA, a teacher of short-hand, by Faithorne; and another of LEBELOMAN, or BELONIAN, who was of the same profession, and very probably by the same engraver.

I know nothing of these persons.

TRADESMEN, MECHANICS, &c.

JACOB TONSON, a bookfeller of prime note, printed several of the works of Mr. Dryden, and other eminent authors in the reign of Charles II. The first edition of the "Spanish Friar" was "printed for Richard and Jacob Tonson, at Gray's Inn Gate, in Gray's Inn Lane, and at the Judge's Head in Chancery Lane, 1681." His portrait belongs to the reign of Anne.

The most flourishing bookfeller at this period was George Sawbridge, who left each of his four daughters ten thousand pounds. He was succeeded in trade by Awnsham Churchill, his apprentice. In the reign of Charles I. and the former part of this reign, there were but two or three eminent bookfellers in the kingdom, who employed persons to collect for them at home and abroad, and sold their refuse to inferior tradesmen.

JOHN DUNTON was a bookfeller who failed in trade, and afterwards turned author. He unluckily failed several times in his new profession. His head belongs to the reign of ANNE.

JOHN OVERTON, print-feller. His portrait, which belongs to the reign of ANNE, represents him in the 68th year of his age.

EDWARDUS COWPER; J. Vander Vaart. p. Pelham f. 1724; mezz.

Edward Cooper was a very considerable print-feller in the latter end of this reign, and was a thriving man in trade for a long course of years. His name is affixed to a great number of mezzotintos.

ALEXANDER BROWN may be reckoned among the print-fellers, though he more properly belongs to another division. There is some account of him higher up in this class.

RICHARD THOMPSON*; G. Soust (or Zoust) p. F. Place f. b. sb. mezz.

This is esteemed the best of Place's portraits.

Richard Tompson was certainly a print-feller; but I am in some doubt whether he was an engraver. I have seen the words Tompson excudit to mezzotintos of the duchess of Portsmouth, the countess of Exeter, the countess of Stamford, the lord John and lord Bernard Stuart, Mrs. Davis, and several others, but never Tompson fecit. It would perhaps be needless to inform the reader, that the word excudit is generally used by those that take off prints at the rolling press, and fecit by those that engrave them.

It has been already observed, that Tompson, who employed Van Somer to engrave for him, has been confounded with that artist.

JOHANNES BULFINCH; Loggan sc. 12mo.

I have been informed that Bulfinch, who was a print-feller in the latter end of the reign of Charles II. was living, and in the same profession, in the reign of Anne; but know not when he died. He was a great lover, and also a collector of pictures. It is observable that all persons, whose occupations have any sort of connection with design, are apt to grow enamoured of the works of eminent masters, from the history-painter down to the pattern-drawer and print-feller.

I have seen some authentic drawings of portraits, which certainly belonged to Bulfinch, and which are said to have been taken, by his own hand from original paintings.

The plate whence this print was taken is in the custody of the master of St. John's college, in Cambridge.

There is a portrait of this dutchess of Somerset, by sir Peter Lely, in the library of the same college.

The dutchess of SOMERSET ; Lely p. Vander-vaart f. sh. mezz.

There is a mezzotinto print of a young lady of about seven years of age, inscribed “ The Dutchess of Somerset.” It is done after a painting of sir Peter Lely, and was sold by Alexander Browne. Qu. if the above lady, when a child, or the lady Elizabeth Percy, who was first married to Henry Cavendish, earl of Ogle, next was claimed in marriage by Thomas Thynne, esq. and lastly married to Charles Seymour duke of Somerset. It is most probable that it is the portrait of the latter, as she was certainly married to the duke in this reign*.

FRANCES STUART, dutchefs of Richmond;

Her portrait is among the beauties at Windsor, and her effigy in wax is preserved in Westminster-Abbey.

The dutchefs of Richmond, who is better known by the name of Mrs. Stuart, was a daughter of captain Walter Stuart, son of lord Blantyre, a Scottish nobleman. She was perhaps the finest figure that ever appeared in the court of Charles II. Such were the attractives of her person, that, even in the presence of lady Castlemaine, she drew upon her the eyes of every beholder. It was supposed that Charles would have divorced his queen, and raised her to the throne: certain it is that she made the deepest impression upon the heart of that monarch; and his passion for her was daily increasing when she married the duke of Richmond. All the rage of a disappointed lover fell upon the duke, his consort and the earl of Clarendon, who was supposed to be instrumental to the match. Her wit was so far from being extraordinary, that it stood in need of all her beauty to recommend it. See more of her in lord Clarendon's "Continuation of the Account of his own Life." There is a good deal of her secret history in the "Memoirs de Grammont," written by count Hamilton*.

* Lee has dedicated his "Theodosius" to her, and has complimented her beauty in much the same strain as he has characterized the courage of Alexander the Great. "To behold you, says he, is to make prophets quite forget their heaven, and bind the poets with eternal rapture."—Philip Rotier, one of the engravers of medals to Charles II. is supposed, by Mr. Walpole, to have been the person, "who being in love with the fair Mrs. Stuart, afterwards dutchess of Richmond, represented her likeness, under the form of a Britannia, on the reverse of a large medal, with the king's head &c." The medal, engraved by Vertue, is in Fenton's edition of Waller's "Poems." The following epigram upon it was written by that poet: the observations annexed are by the ingenious editor.

Our guard upon the royal side!
On the reverse our beauty's pride!
Here we discern the frown and smile;
The force and glory of our isle.
In the rich medal, both so like
Immortals stand, it seems antique;
Carv'd by some master, when the bold
Greeks made their Jove descend in gold;
And Danae, wond'ring at that show'r,
Which falling storm'd her brazen tow'r.
Britannia there, the fort in vain
Had batter'd been with golden rain †:
Thunder itself had fail'd to pass;
Virtue's a stronger guard than brass.

"Roti (Rotier), the celebrated graver to Charles II. was so passionate an admirer of the beautiful Mrs. Stuart, afterwards dutchess of Richmond, that, on the reverse of the best of our coin, he delineated the face of Britannia from her picture. And in some medals, where he had more room to display both his art and affection, the similitude of feature is said to have been so exact, that every one who knew her grace could, at the first view, discover who sat for Britannia."

|| See "Anec. of Painting, iii. p. 94. See also Evelyn's "Numismata," p. 27, 28, 137.

† That is, had the lady, who appears in the character of Britannia on the medal, been in Danae's place, Jove's attempt upon her had been in vain, as was Charles's on Mrs. Stuart. See Burnet, i. 251, &c. Clarendon's "Continuation," p. 338.

Mary,

Mary, sole daughter and heiress of Thomas, lord Fairfax, and wife of George Villiers, duke of Buckingham, was a woman of little or no beauty §, but of great virtue and piety. The duke, who seemed to be all mankind's epitome, well knew how to assume at least, the character of an affectionate husband; and loved her, very probably in her turn, as she was a complying and contented wife. A man who could equally adapt himself to the presbyterian Fairfax and the irreligious Charles, could with great ease, become a civil and obliging husband to a woman who was never disposed to check the current of his humour, or correct the eccentricity of his course. She died in 1705, in the 66th year of her age.

ANNE, dutchess of Albemarle; sold by R. Gammon; b. sb.

ANNE, dutchess of Albemarle; standing hand in hand with the duke; sold by Stent; very bad.

Anne Clarges, dutchess of Albemarle, was the daughter of a blacksmith †, who gave her an education suitable to the employment she was bred to, which was that of a milliner. As the manners are generally formed early in life, § Her person is said to have been low and fat. See Ives's "Select Papers," p. 40.

† The following quotation is from a manuscript of Mr. Aubrey, in Ashmole's Museum: "When he (Monk) was prisoner in the Tower, his sempstress, Nan Clarges, a blacksmith's daughter, was kind to him in a double capacity. It must be remembered that he was then in want, and that she assisted him. Here she was got with child. She was not at all handsome, nor cleanly: her mother was one of the five women barbers, and a woman of ill fame. A ballad was made on her and the other four: the burden of it was,

" Did you ever hear the like,
 " Or ever hear the same,
 " Of five women barbers,
 " That lived in Drury Lane."

she retained something of the smith's daughter, even at her highest elevation. She was first the mistress, and afterwards the wife, of general Monk; who had such an opinion of her understanding, that he often consulted her in the greatest emergencies. As she was a thorough royalist, it is probable that she had no inconsiderable share in the Restoration. She is supposed to have recommended several of the privy-counsellors in the list which the general presented to the king soon after his landing. It is more than probable that she carried on a very lucrative trade in selling of offices, which were generally filled by such as gave her most money*. She was an implacable enemy to lord Clarendon; and had so great an influence over her husband as to prevail with him to help ruin that excellent man, though he was one of his best friends. Indeed the general was afraid to offend her, as she presently took fire; and her anger knew no bounds. She was a great mistress of all the low eloquence of abusive rage, and seldom failed to discharge a volley of curses against such as thoroughly provoked her†. Nothing is more certain, than that the intrepid commander, who was never afraid of bullets, was often terrified by the fury of his wife.

ELIZABETH, dutchess of Albemarle; Sherwin f. b. sb. mezz. Extremely scarce.

Elizabeth, daughter of lord Ogle, was married to Christopher, son and heir to George, duke of Albemarle, when he was only sixteen years of age. Christopher, in the year 1670, succeeded his father in title and estate. The wayward and peevish temper of his dutchefs made him frequently think a bottle a much more desirable companion. She espoused to her second husband, Ralph, lord Montagu †, who, in 1705, was created lord Monthermer and duke of Montagu *. She survived him many years, and died of mere old age, the 28th of August, 1738, leaving no issue by either of her husbands.

A N N E, dutchefs of Monmouth; inscribed "Catharina Demodema," &c. Lely p. Shenck f. b. sb. mezz.

† As this great lady had an immense estate from her noble ancestors, she was determined, after the duke of Albemarle's death, to give her hand, to nobody but a sovereign prince. Lord Montagu therefore courted, and married her, as emperor of China. This story was brought on the stage in the comedy of the "Double Gallant, or sick Lady's Cure," written by Colley Cibber. Her grace, who lived for some time at Montagu House, and died in Clerkenwell, was, as may well be supposed, disordered in her head, and saw no company; but, to her death, was constantly served on the knee as a sovereign. As the duke †, her second husband, confined her, he was obliged by her relations to produce her in open court, to ascertain that she was alive. Soon after her death, which was in a very advanced age, the savings of her estate, after an allowance of three thousand pounds a year for the maintenance of her rank, were divided among her own relations. I shall add to this note, which I owe to Mr. Horace Walpole, that Richard lord Rofs, a man of wit, humour, and frolic, who affected to imitate the earl of Rochester, was rival to lord Montagu. He is said to have written the following verses upon his marriage with the dutchefs of Albemarle.

Insulting rival, never boast
Thy conquest lately won;
No wonder if her heart was lost:
Her senses first were gone.
From one that's under Bedlam's laws
What glory can be had?
For love of thee was not the cause;
It proves that she was mad.

* It was this duke, who, when the duke of Marlborough, in high terms, commended the excellency of his water-works at Broughton, replied with great quickness: But they are by no means comparable to your grace's fire-works.

Her portrait, in the character of Pallas, is in the gallery of Beauties at Windsor.

Barbara Villiers, dutchess of Cleveland, was sole daughter and heir of William viscount Grandison, and wife to Roger Palmer, esq. afterwards created earl of Castlemaine. Her person was to the last degree beautiful; but she was, in the same degree, rapacious, prodigal, and revengeful. She had, for a considerable time, a great, and no less dangerous influence over the king; as no woman of her age was more likely to beggar, or embroil a kingdom. She was the most inveterate enemy of the earl of Clarendon, who thought it an indignity to his character to shew common civilities, much more to pay his court; to the mistress of the greatest monarch upon earth †. This she did effectually; and the business of the English court was constantly carried on with a subserviency to that of France. She occasionally dissembled love, the vapours, or sickness; and rarely ever failed of working the easy monarch to her point. Her polite manners and agreeable temper riveted the chains which her personal charms had imposed upon him: she had the first place in his affections, and he continued to love her to the day of his death. Her beauty, which was not of the most delicate kind, seemed to be very little impaired at seventy years of age ‡. Ob. Nov. 1734, Æt. 89. She was married to Charles, earl of Warwick, whom she survived about five years. She was so eminent for her bounty to the poor, that the earl, her husband, was said to have left his estate to charitable uses. Such was the fame of her charity and hospitality, that it advanced the rent of the houses in her neighbourhood, where she was the common arbitress of controversies, which she decided with great sagacity and judgment, and prevented many tedious and expensive law-suits. The earl, her husband, alluding to her œconomy, as well as her other excellencies, declared, that “he had rather have her with five thousand pounds, than any other woman with twenty thousand.” She died the 12th of April, 1678. The countess of STAMFORD; Wissing p. Becket f. b. mezz.

This lady was daughter of Mr Harvey of Combe, in Surrey, and first wife of Thomas Grey, the second earl of Stamford. As I have but one of these prints before me, I am in some doubt whether the former does not represent lady Anne Cecil*, the first countess of Stamford. I am assured that her portrait by Lely is at Dunham.

Her portrait is at the late sir Andrew Fountaine’s at Narford, Norfolk †.

Elizabeth Butler was eldest daughter of James, duke of Ormond, and second wife to Philip Stanhope, earl of Chesterfield.—It has been observed that a man could not turn round without being struck with beauties in the court of Charles II. The countess of Chesterfield was one of the most striking in the circle. Her husband did not know what a treasure he had in his possession, and treated her, at first, with disregard: but when every body else admired her, he became her admirer too, and was sufficiently flighted in his turn. He rightly concluded, that when the eyes of all the world were turned upon her, there were among them the eyes of some lovers. This naturally excited his jealousy, and he appears to have felt the most unhappy part of the passion of love in a more exquisite degree than any other. His suspicion particularly fell upon the duke of York, who, it seems was not insensible of her charms, and was far from being the most cautious of men in the conduct of his amours. The name of lady Ch...d often occurs in the “Memoires de Grammont.”

When Tadlow walks the streets, the pavours cry

Catharine, daughter of Thomas, lord Wotton, and widow of Henry, lord Stanhope. She had a daughter, named Catharine after her mother, who married William, lord Allington. She was created countess of Chesterfield by Charles the Second.

There is in, the Gallery of Beauties at Windsor, a portrait by sir Peter Lely, called "Lady ROCHESTER," which has been mistaken for the wife of John, the famous lord, who was undubitably no beauty. The portrait in question is conjectured to represent the first wife of Laurence Hyde, second son of Edward earl of Clarendon, who was created viscount Hyde and baron of Wotton Bassett, the 24th of April, 1681, and earl of Rochester, the 29th of November, 1682. As sir Peter Lely died in 1680, I have placed her here as the wife of an earl's second son; but, perhaps, improperly. If there be a portrait at Cassiobury resembling this at Windsor, it may be depended upon as done for one of the wives of earl Laurence, and may probably lead to a further discovery.

The lady BELLA SIS (BELLASYSE); Lely
p. Tompson exc. b. sb. mezz.

This lady, who was widow of the son of John, lord Bellasyfe, was remarkable for a vivacity which seems to have supplied the place, and answered all the purposes of beauty. Though she was one of the least handsome women that appeared at court, she gained so far upon the affections of the duke of York, that he gave her a promise under his hand to marry her. He did his utmost to convert her to his own religion: but nothing could induce her to change that in which she had been educated. The lord Bellasyfe, her father-in-law, who was a zealous papist, dreading the influence that such a woman might have upon the duke in religious affairs, disclosed the secret of the contract to the king. Charles sent for his brother, and told him, "it was too much to have played the fool once: that was not to be done a second time, and at such an age*." The lady was so intimidated by threats, that she gave up the original contract, but took care to preserve an attested copy. It appears from a letter of Dr. Swift to Mrs. Dingley, lately published, that she died in the reign of Anne; and that lord Berkeley of Stratton, who was one of her executors, got about 10,000 l. by her death. The portrait at Windsor, which is commonly called lady Byron's, is supposed to be that of lady Bellasyfe. The almost total absence of beauty in it seems to confirm that conjecture. See "Anec. of Paint." III. p. 39.

Lady Morland was daughter of George Fielding, esq. and wife of sir Samuel Morland, bart. of Sulhamsted Banister, in the county of Berks, and master of the mechanics to Charles II. Ob. 20 Feb. 1678-9. She lies buried in Westminster-abbey, with an inscription in English and Hebrew upon her monument: there is also an epitaph, which seems to have been written in the Ethiopic language, that people might not read it. Lady Warner, a woman of great beauty and many accomplishments, was converted to the Roman Catholic religion about the same time with fir John Warner her husband. She took the habit of the English nuns, called Sepulchrines, at Liege, together with Mrs. Elizabeth Warner, her sister-in-law, the 30th of April, 1665. Both these ladies went afterwards into the convent of Carthusianesses, or poor Clares, at Gravelin*. Sir John entered into the Society

* "The cells of the Carthusianesses, at Gravelin, (says the author of lady Warner's Life), are not long enough for one of an ordinary stature to lie at full length; and therefore when they sleep they almost sit upright in their beds, which are not two feet and a half broad; and the cell is no broader, besides what the bed takes up, than to give room enough for a single person to go in and out. All their furniture is a little low stool to sit upon, and a straw-bed and bolster, (or, if sick, a pillow of chaff;) upon which they lie in their habits, having a blanket to cover them. They wear no linen: go barefoot, having only sandals; rise at midnight; abstain all their life-time from flesh; and keep such a fast all the year as we do in Lent."

Mary, daughter of sir Edward Alston, and wife of sir James Langham, had, in the early part of her life, a propensity to atheism; but, as she advanced in years and understanding, she became a christian upon sound principles and rational conviction, and experimentally found, that the uniform practice of religion and virtue added strength to reason, and clearness to evidence. Hence it was that no woman of her age was more religious or less superstitious. She was equally a stranger to the moroseness and flights of bigotry; and displayed a constant cheerfulness, the natural effect of a good conscience, which rendered her a more agreeable and amiable woman, in proportion as she was a better Christian. She died in September, 1660.

GENTLEWOMEN, &c.

Mrs. Sedley was daughter of sir Charles Sedley, bart. See CATHARINE, countess of Dorchester, in the next reign.

Madam MARY KIRK; Lely p. Browne; b. sb. mczz.

Mrs. Kirk was daughter of George Kirk, esq. groom of the bed-chamber to Charles II. and sister to Diana Vere, the last countess of Oxford of that name. She was maid of honour to queen Catharine, and one of that constellation of beauties which shone at court in the former part of this reign. But she proved a wandering, and at length a fallen star. Other maids of honour were prudent enough to retire into the country upon proper occasions; but she inadvertently staid too long in town, and was delivered of a child at Whitehall. When she was in the pride of all her beauty and fame, sir Richard Vernon*, a country gentleman of about 1500 l. a year, made his addressees to her; but she rejected his courtship with disdain. Upon his repulse, he retired to his rural seat, forsook his dogs and horses, and abandoned himself to grief and despair. Mr. Thomas Killigrew, of the king's bed-chamber, who was his relation, went to visit this disconsolate lover; and, with a view of curing him of his passion, told him all the circumstances of his mistress's disgrace. He was transported with the most frantic joy at the news, as he now thought her haughtiness sufficiently humbled to listen to his suit. He renewed his addressees with more ardency than ever, and in a short time she became his wife. Her conduct was so nice in the marriage state, that he was reputed the father of all the children she

Mrs. Price, maid of honour to Anne, dutchess of York, was a woman of an agreeable wit and vivacity, but had scarce any pretensions to beauty. Though she was not without intrigues of her own, she seemed to be only intent upon those of others. She was extremely cautious of disclosing any secrets that regarded herself; but was never scrupulous of betraying those of her enemies, or even her friends. Few women of her time knew better who and who were together. She discovered and made public a low amour of the earl of Rochester; for which she felt the whole weight of his resentment, in a lampoon written with the usual spirit of that licentious satirist. When the earl assumed the character of a mountebank and fortune-teller, she sent her maid to consult him: he told her, that "she waited on a good-natured lady, whose only fault was loving wine and men." See "Memoires de Grammont *."

Madam MIDDLETON; Lely p. Thomson exc. mezz.

* There was a lady Price, a fine woman, who was daughter of sir Edmund Warcup, concerning whom see Wood's "Fasti Oxon." ii. 148. Her father had the vanity to think that Charles II. would marry her, though he had then a queen. There were letters of his, wherein he mentioned that "his daughter was one night and t'other with the king, and very graciously received by him."

There is another print of her by Mac Ardell, erroneously inscribed Lady Middleton *.

Her portrait is in the gallery at Windsor.

Mrs. Middleton, a woman of small fortune, but of great beauty, was one of the ladies that attracted the particular notice of the gallant chevalier de Grammont, soon after his arrival in England. He made her many costly presents, which she readily accepted, and publickly wore. But he was cured of his growing passion for her, almost as soon as he had seen the amiable Mrs. Hamilton, who was incomparably more beautiful, and was without her affectation and coquetry. Mrs. Middleton could well bear the loss of a single lover: she had generally several in her train, who were never heard to complain of her cruelty.—Mrs. Brooke, afterwards lady Denham, was a woman of special note at this time, and no less remarkable for her gaiety, than tragical end †. But the most extraordinary lady was the countess of Shrewsbury, who was so far from being restrained or directed by common form, that she set reputation at the utmost defiance, and was the greatest heroine in her amours, of any of her contemporaries ‡.

*She is represented playing on the guitar .

At Billingsbere, in Berkshire, the seat of Richard Neville Neville, esq. is a fine portrait of her by Kneller, with a Black. This picture, which is in the painter’s best manner, was the property of Baptist May, who was privy purse to Charles II. and of singular service to him in his private pleasures ¶.

* The guitar was never in so general vogue in England, as it was in this reign. The king was pleased with hearing Signor Francisco, an Italian, play on this instrument ; as he knew how to fetch better music out of it than any other performer. Hence it became fashionable at court, and especially among the king’s mistresses, who were greater leaders in fashions of all kinds, than the queen herself.

¶ John Wilmot earl of Rochester ; John Sheffield, earl of Mulgrave ; lord Buckhurst, afterwards earl of Dorset ; Henry, son of Thomas Killegrew ; Henry Savile ; Fleetwood Sheppard, and Baptist May, were generally of the number of those select and facetious parties which enlivened the evenings of Charles II. in the apartments of his mistresses. The last but one of these persons, who, as well as the earl of Dorset, was a friend and patron of Prior, was a gentleman-usher, and daily-waiter, and afterwards usher of the black rod to king William. See more of these favourites in “Athen. Oxon.” ii. col. 1039. See also lord Clarendon’s “Continuat.” fol. p. 338, 355, 438, &c.

Mary Davis, mistress to Charles II. was some time comedian in the duke of York's theatre. She had one daughter by the king; namely Mary, who took the surname of Tudor, and was in 1687, married to the son of sir Francis Ratcliffe, who became earl of Derwentwater*.

It would be too indelicate to mention the particular consequences of the jalap, which was given to Moll Davies at supper by Nell Gwynn, who knew that she was to lie the same night with the king. It is sufficient to hint at the violence of its operation, and the disastrous effects: such effects as the ancients would have attributed to Anteros †, a malignant deity, and the avowed enemy of Cupid.

† ΑΥΤΕΡΩΣ,

Eleanor

Eleanor Gwynn, better known by the familiar name of Nell, was, at her first setting out in the world, a plebeian of the lowest rank, and sold oranges in the playhouse. Nature seems to have qualified her for the theatre. Her person, though below the middle size, was well-turned: she had a good natural air, and a sprightliness that promised every thing in comedy. She was instructed by Hart and Lacy, who were both actors of eminence; and, in a short time, she became eminent herself in the same profession. She acted the most spirited and fantastic parts *, and spoke a prologue or epilogue with admirable address. The pert and vivacious prattle of the orange-wench, was, by degrees, refined into such wit as could please Charles II. Indeed it was sometimes carried to extravagance: but even her highest flights were so natural, that they rather provoked laughter than excited disgust. She is said to have been kept by lord Dorset, before she was retained by the king, and to have been introduced to the latter by the duke of Buckingham, with a view of supplanting the dutchess of Cleveland †. Nell, who knew how to mimic every thing ridiculous about the court, presently ingratiated herself with her merry sovereign, and retained a considerable place in his affection to the time of his death.—She continued to hang on her cloaths with her usual negligence when she was the king's mistress: but whatever she did became her. Ob. 1637 ‡.

This unhappy woman, who was also one of the king's mistresses, was the daughter of a clergyman, and is said by bishop Burnet, to have fallen into "many scandalous disorders, attended with very dismal adventures." But her sense of religion was so far from being extinct, when she was engaged in an ill course of life, that she frequently felt all the poignancy of remorse. She died a sincere penitent. Whether Mrs. Knight were penitent from the same kind of guilt that Mrs. Roberts was, is altogether uncertain. Thus much we are sure of, that it was no easy task for a woman who happened to be a favourite of Charles, and could probably charm him by her person and her voice, to preserve her virtue. She, perhaps, deserves to be in better company*.

a worthy clergyman, whom, as she was going through the city, she saw some bailiffs hurrying to prison, is a known fact; as is also that of her being insulted in her coach at Oxford, by the mob, who mistook her for the dutchess of Portsmouth. Upon which she looked out of the window, and said, with her usual good humour, Pray good people, be civil: I am the protestant whore. This Laconic speech drew upon her the blessings of the populace, who suffered her to proceed without further molestation.

* If any credit may be given to a manuscript lampoon, dated 1686, Mrs. Knight was employed by Charles as a procureress: particularly, she was sent with overtures to Nell Gwynn; whom, as the same authority says, lord Buckhurst would not part with, till he was reimbursed the expences he had lavished upon her.

This lady, who was second wife to the Duke of Lauderdale, was daughter and heir to William Murray, earl of Dysart, and widow of Sir Lionel Tolmach *, of Helmingham in Suffolk. Here she was frequently visited by Oliver Cromwell, which occasioned the report of their amorous correspondence. She was a woman of great quickness of wit, of an extensive knowledge of the world, and of uncommon penetration in state affairs. But her politics seem to have been of much the same cast with those of her husband. Bishop Burnet tells us, that “she writ him a long account of shutting up the Exchequer, as both just and necessary †.” It was much the same sort of necessity that put her upon setting to sale all kinds of offices, during the duke’s oppressive administration in Scotland. It is well known that he acted in that kingdom like an Eastern monarch, and his dutchess carried herself with all the haughtiness of a sultana who governed him ‡.

In the English translation of St. Evremond's works is a copy from Lombart's print of the dutchess of York, inscribed, "The Dutchess of Mazarine."

Hortense Mancini was, by permission of Lewis XIV. heiress to the title, arms, and estate of her uncle, the famous cardinal Mazarine; all which she transferred, by a marriage-contract, to the duke of Meilleraye, whom she espoused. She possessed every qualification that could inspire love, and appears to have been extremely susceptible of that passion herself. Having quarrelled with the duke her husband, she came into England, flushed with the conquests she had made in her own country. She had evidently a design upon Charles II. * and was regarded as a most formidable rival to the dutchess of Portsmouth. It is said that a discovery of an intrigue, in which she imprudently engaged soon after she came over, prevented her gaining the ascendant in the royal favour. The king, however, assigned her an annual pension of four thousand pounds. She lived many years at Chelsea, where her house was daily resorted to by the witty, the gallant, and polite. St. Evremond, her avowed admirer, has drawn her character to great advantage; indeed so great, that we presently see his passions were too much engaged for a candid historian. He could scarce think that so angelic a creature had any foibles, much less that she had vices which would have disgraced the meanest of her sex. Ob. 2 July, 1699 †.

* "Hist of the House of Yvery," II. p. 396, &c.

The notices that we have of most of the ladies in this reign, or any other, are but slender. If Mrs. Manley ‡ had flourished at this period, there is no question but we should have had more of their secret history. It would doubtless have afforded a much more plentiful harvest for such a writer than the reign of Anne.

* Fenton, in his Observations on Waller's "Triple Combat," informs us, that she was once thought a fit match for Charles; and that Henrietta Maria and cardinal Mazarine had designed her for his queen. The same author observes that she once had the greatest fortune of any lady in Europe.

† It appears from several printed letters of cardinal Mazarine to Lewis XIV. that that prince was much in love with another niece of the cardinal's, at the time of his marriage-treaty with the infantina.

Richard Penderell, and his brother William, were chiefly instrumental to the escape of Charles II. after the fatal battle of Worcester. There were six brothers of this family, who rented little farms on the borders of Staffordshire, and were frequently employed as labourers in cutting down timber. The king took shelter, the first night after his escape, at White Ladies, a house belonging to the Penderells, about twenty miles from Worcester. Here he put on a leather doublet and a green jerkin, cut his hair short, and threw his cloaths into a privy. Richard went with him into a wood, where he was concealed a whole day; during which time he had nothing to eat or drink. He afterwards attended him many miles on foot, and came back with him to one of his brother's houses, where he found major Careless, who accompanied him in Boscobel Wood, where they concealed themselves in an oak. The Penderells and Mrs. Lane were among the small number of loyalists who were rewarded after the Restoration. Richard died 8 Feb. 1671, and JOHN OGLE, in Waterman's Lane, in White Fryers; 8vo.

Jack Ogle, who some time rode privately in the first troop of guards, was notorious for his frolics and low humour. He inherited a small estate, which he presently dissipated; and had afterwards recourse to the gaming-table, with various success. It is said, that in a run of ill luck he lost his cloak, and borrowed his landlady's red petticoat to carry with him to a muster; and that the duke of Monmouth having a hint of it, ordered the whole troop to cloak, on purpose to expose him †. One of his frolics had like to have cost him his life. Having a quarrel in the streets with a French officer of the foot-guards, who was a man of humour like himself, a challenge ensued, and they agreed to go into the fields to fight. A rabble followed them, in great expectation of

* It appears from the notes on this account, that Richard was the third brother of the Penderells, and that he was commonly called Trussy Richard. He and his five brethren lived at or near White Ladies, in a little farm within the wood. They were employed in cutting down timber and watching it to prevent its being stolen. They subsisted chiefly upon the profit of some cow-grass. All the brothers were privy to the secret of the king's concealment; but Richard went many miles with him to assist him in his escape †.

a duel. Before they got thither the quarrel was made up; but they ran with precipitation, as if they were eager to engage, and leaped into a saw-pit. Here they were discovered in a very ridiculous posture, as if they were easing themselves. The disappointed mob presently saluted them with a shower of stones and brickbats. Hard drinking, and an infamous distemper, are supposed to have hastened his death, which happened in the 39th year of his age. His sister, who waited on the countess of Inchiquin, was said to have been one of the duke of York's mistresses.

Miles Prance, a silversmith, was accused by one Wren, and also by Bedloe, of being an accomplice in the murder of sir Edmund Bury Godfrey. This he at first strenuously denied. But he was said to be so powerfully wrought upon by the earl of Shaftesbury, as not only to confess himself guilty, but also to accuse two Popish priests, together with Green, Berry, and Hill, of being concerned in the same crime. His testimony was, in some instances, contradictory to Bedloe's, and even to itself. He was tried, and convicted of perjury; but having retracted his evidence in several particulars relative to the plot, his punishment was remitted. It is remarkable that Mr. L'Esrange, who had been accused by him of a secret disaffection to the government received the sacrament presently after him, from the hands of Dr. Sharp, rector of St. Giles's in the Fields:

 his testimony was equally contradictory and incredible. Turberville was another witness of

This plot, whether real or fictitious, occasioned the shedding of some of the best blood in the kingdom, and completed the triumph of the royal party. We are told, that upon this discovery of Keeling, "a new evidence office was erected at White-hall *," and that care was taken to select such judges and juries as would answer the purposes of the court ‖. An elaborate account of the Rye-house conspiracy, of which the duke of York had the garbling †, was written by Dr. Sprat. The author has been so ingenuous as to retract the enormous falsehoods with which he had charged lord Ruffel, in that book ‡. Many more retractions are required to make it an authentic history. The "Secret History of the Rye-house Plot," written by Ford, lord Grey, is worth the reader's notice.

son, and detain him in prison, till he should yield to the exclusion of the duke of York, and make such other concessions as the commons might require of him. When the parliament sat at Oxford, he went about armed with sword and pistol, which furnished a pretence for his accusation. The court party, who watched for an opportunity to retaliate a plot upon the exclusionists, persecuted him with unrelenting violence. Dugdale and other infamous witnesses, who had been informers against the Papists, were retained against him. He defended himself with great spirit and ability, to the confusion of his adversaries: but the jury, who were all zealous royalists, brought him in guilty. He behaved with a becoming fortitude at the place of execution, and persisted in asserting his innocence to the last. He was executed at Oxford, 31 August, 1681.—He was a man of a more enlarged understanding than is commonly found in mechanics. His ingenuity in his trade procured him employment among persons of rank; some of whom he was afterwards permitted to visit upon the foot of a friend. His faults were, being too pragmatical, and indiscretely zealous for his religion.—His daughter was seamstress to king William, a place worth 300 l. a year. Dr. Swift informs us, that “this noble person” and himself were brought acquainted by lady Berkeley. See Swift’s “Letters,” vol. IV. p. 336, edit. 1768.

Thomas Vanner, a wine-cooper, who acquired a competent estate by his trade, was reputed puted a man of sense and religion, before his understanding was bewildered with enthusiasm. He was so strongly possessed with the notions of the Millenarians, or Fifth Monarchy Men, that he strongly expected that Christ was coming to reign upon earth; and that all human government, except that of the saints, was presently to cease. He looked upon Cromwell, and Charles II. as usurpers upon Christ's dominion, and persuaded his weak brethren, that it was their duty to rise and seize upon the kingdom in his name. Accordingly a rabble of them, with Venner at their head, assembled in the streets, and proclaimed king Jesus. They were attacked by a party of the militia, whom they resolutely engaged; as many of them believed themselves to be invulnerable. They were at length overpowered by numbers, and their leader, with twelve of his followers, was executed in January, 1660-1. They "affirmed to the last, that if they had been deceived, the Lord himself was their deceiver *."

JOHN

* Smollett.

The most signal instance of pure enthusiasm, that hath ever occurred to me, is that of Mr. John Mason, minister of Water Stratford, near Buckingham. He was a man of great simplicity of behaviour, of the most unaffected piety, and of learning and abilities far above the common level, till he was bewildered by the mysteries of Calvinism, and infatuated with millenary notions. This calm and grave enthusiast was as firmly persuaded as he was of his own existence, and as strongly persuaded others, that he was the Elias appointed to proclaim the approach of Christ, who was speedily to begin the millennium and fix his throne at Water Stratford. Crowds of people assembled at this place, who were fully convinced that this great æra would presently commence; and especially after Mason had, in the most solemn manner, affirmed to his sister and several other persons, that, as he lay on his bed, he saw Christ in all his majesty. Never was there a scene of more frantic joy, expressed by singing, fiddling, dancing, and all the wildness of enthusiastic gestures and rapturous vociferation, than was for some time, seen at Stratford; where a mixed multitude assembled to hail the approach of king Jesus. Every vagabond and village fidler that could be procured bore a part in the JOHN the Quaker, (JOHN KELSEY); M. Lauron † delin. P. Tempest exc. b. sb. One of the Set of the Cries of London, drawn after the life. The set consists of upwards of seventy ‡.

John Kelsey went to Constantinople, upon no less a design than that of converting the grand signor. He preached at the corner of one of the streets of that city, with all the vehemence of a fanatic: but as he spoke in his own language, the people stared at him, but could not so much as guess at the drift of his discourse. They soon concluded him to be out of his senses, and carried him to a mad-house, where he was confined for six months. One of the keepers happening to hear him speak the word English, informed lord Winchelsea, who was then ambassador to the Porte, that a mad countryman of his was then under confinement. His lordship sent for him; and he appeared before him in a torn and dirty hat, which he could not, by any means, be persuaded to take off. The ambassador thought that a little of the Turkish discipline would be of service to him, and presently ordered him to be drubbed upon the feet. This occasioned a total change in his behaviour, and he acknowledged that the drubbing had a good rude concert at this tumultuous jubilee. Mason was observed to speak rationally on every subject that had no relation to his wild notions of religion. He died, in 1695, soon after he fancied that he had seen his saviour, fully convinced of the reality of the vision and of his own divine mission. See a particular Account of his Life and Character by H. Maurice, rector of Tyringham, Bucks, 1695, 4to pamphlet.

† It should be observed that M and L, the initials of this painter's name, are generally united in the engravings from his works: hence it is that he has been miscalled Mauron.

effect upon his spirit. Upon searching his pockets a letter was found addressed to the great Turk, in which he told him, that he was a scourge in the hand of God to chastise the wicked; and that he sent him not only to denounce, but to execute vengeance. He was put on board a ship bound for England, but found means to escape in his passage, and returned to Constantinople. He was soon after sent on board another ship, and so effectually secured, that he could not escape a second time*.

LODOWICK MUGGLETON; ob. Mar. 12, 1697, Æt. 90; large 4to. mezz.

Lodowick Muggleton, who was by trade a tailor, was a notorious schismatic, and father of the sect called after his name. He was a great pretender to inward light, which was to answer every purpose of religion. He regarded himself as above ordinances of every kind, not excepting even prayer and preaching. He acknowledged but one person in the Godhead, rejected creeds, and all church-discipline and authority; but expected the greatest deference to be paid to what he taught and enjoined himself. He esteemed the scripture a dead letter, and resolved every thing into his own private spirit. He, like other enthusiasts, made no scruple of damning all the world that differed from his own mode of faith. His disciples are said to have recorded many of his prophecies. He began to distinguish himself about the year 1650*. His books, for writing which he was pilloried and imprisoned, were burnt by the common hangman.

* See the "Life of Sir Dudley North."

OLIVER C. PORTER; un insensé pour la religion †. M. Lauron del. P. Tempest exc. One of the Set of Cries; b. sb ‡.

This man, whose christian name was Daniel, was porter to Oliver Cromwell, in whose service he learned much of the cant that prevailed at that time. He was a great plodder in books of divinity, especially in those of the mystical kind, which are supposed to have turned his brain. He was many years in Bedlam, where his library was, after some time, allowed him; as there was not the least probability of his cure. The most conspicuous of his books was a large Bible, given him by Nell Gwynn ‖. He frequently preached, and sometimes prophesied;

* George Fox, a journeyman shoemaker, and one of the great apostles of the Quakers, began to exert himself about the same time. He was a friend and associate of Muggleton; and they are said to have been "so deeply seized with despair, that, like the possessed man in the gospel, they forsook all human conversation, and retired into deserts and solitary places, where they spent whole days and nights alone." Leslie's "Snake in the Grass," edit. 1698, p. 331. See also Fox's "Journal."

† The gloom which religion too often spreads over the human mind, is generally the effect of narrow conceptions of the Deity, "whose mercy is over all his works." This has frequently filled the cells of Bedlam, and St. Luke's hospital, with the most wretched of all patients. To represent the best of Beings, as the worst of tyrants, which some religionists have done, drives men of melancholy tempers directly to despair, and is worse, in effect, than Atheism itself.

‡ He was remarkably tall, as appears by a large O, the standard of his height, on the back of the terrace, at Windsor.

and was said to have foretold several remarkable events, particularly the fire of London*. One would think that Butler had this frantic enthusiast in view, where he says :

 “ As pigs are said to see the wind ;
 “ Fill’d Bedlam with predestination, &c.”

Hud.

Mr. Charles Leslie, who has placed him in the same class with Fox and Muggleton, tells us, that people often went to hear him preach, and “ would sit many hours under his window with “ great signs of devotion.” That gentleman had the curiosity to ask a grave matron, who was among his auditors, “ what she could profit by hearing that madman?” She, with a composed countenance, as pitying his ignorance, replied, “ That Festus thought Paul “ was mad †.”

In the last century of his life he was a fisherman; and when he was no longer able to follow that occupation, he went begging about Bolton, and other places in Yorkshire. He died in December, 1670, and lies buried at Bolton, where, in 1743, a monument was erected to his memory. James Turner, a goldsmith, in London, and lieutenant-colonel of the city militia, was, for some time, esteemed a man of a genteel spirit, which was always observed to carry him far beyond the limits of his fortune. His vices and extravagancies not only exhausted his patrimony, which was very considerable, but also involved him in debt. Hence he betook himself to the lowest arts and most villanous practices to maintain the figure of a gentleman. He was executed for robbing the house of Mr. Francis Tryton, a merchant, of jewels, and other things of value, to the amount of about six thousand pounds. He was executed for this burglary in Lime-street, London, 22 Jan. 1663-4. He expressed a true sense of his guilt at the place of his execution, and desired the minister who attended to read to him the 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18 verses of the second chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews. He left forty shillings to be distributed among the poor of the parish where he suffered, and eighteen shillings and six-pence only to his wife. See the “Relation,” &c. p. 25.

This daring ruffian was notorious for seizing the person of the duke of Ormond, with an intention to hang him at Tyburn, and for stealing the crown out of the Tower*. He was very near being successful in both these enterprises: it was with no small difficulty that the duke escaped, and the crown was wrested from his hands. The cunning of this boldest of all thieves was equal to his intrepidity. He told the king, by whom he was examined, that he had undertaken to kill him; and that he went, with that purpose, to a place in the river where he bathed; but was struck with so profound an awe upon sight of his (naked) majesty that his resolution failed him, and he entirely laid aside his design: that he belonged to a band of ruffians equally desperate with himself, who had bound themselves by the strongest oaths to revenge the death of any of their associates. Upon this he received the royal pardon, and had a handsome pension assigned him. He was now no longer considered as an impudent criminal, but as a court favourite; and application was made to the throne by the mediation of Mr. Blood †. Ob. 24 Aug. 1680. See the "Biograpia;"

Sir HENRY MORGAN; 4^{to}.

Sir HENRY MORGAN; Van Hove sc. 12mo.

Captain Morgan, commonly called sir Henry Morgan, the most infamous of all pirates, was the son of a substantial yeoman in Wales. His inclination leading him early to the sea, he entered into the service of a master of a vessel bound for Barbadoes, who treacherously sold him soon after he landed on that shore. When he had obtained his liberty, he went to Jamaica to seek his fortune. Here he fell in with some freebooters, and entered on board one of their ships; and having displayed his courage on several occasions, he in a short time, became a captain. He was afterwards vice-admiral under Mansvelt, an old pirate of prime notoriety, who died soon after he engaged himself in his service. If the courage of Morgan had been properly directed, it would have done him the greatest honour: it was perhaps not inferior to that of Monck or Rupert; and several of his stratagems were as extraordinary as his courage. But he was rapacious, cruel, and debauched, in the same degree that he was valiant. The cruelties exercised on the Indians by the Spaniards were not equal to what that people suffered by his orders, to make them discover their hidden treasures, after he had taken and plundered their towns. The greatest of his exploits was taking Panama, which he burnt and pillaged, after he had, with twelve hundred men, defeated the governor, at the head of two squadrons of horse, four regiments of foot, and a great number of wild bulls, driven by Indian slaves*. One hundred and seventy-five beasts of burden were laden with the gold, silver, and other valuables which he took in that city. See a circumstantial account of him in the "History of the Buccaneers," to which is prefixed his head.

"Mrs. MARY DAVIS, of great Saughall, near Chester, Anno 1668; Ætatis 74. When she was twenty-eight years of age, an excrescence grew upon her head, like to a wen, which continued thirty years, and then grew into two horns." Done from the original painting, in the collection of the honourable Sir Hans Sloane, bart. b. sb. mezz.

There is a print of this woman in Dr. Charles Leigh's "Natural History of Lancashire, Cheshire, and the Peak of Derbyshire;" 1700; fol. Tab. VII. The inscription signifies that her portrait was taken in 1668, in the seventy-second year of her age: that the excrescence continued thirty-two years before it grew into horns: that after four years she cast them; then grew two more; and in about four years she cast these also: that the horns which were upon her head in 1668, were of four years growth, and then loose. Her picture, and one of her horns, are in Ashmole's Museum.

* A little before his expedition to Panama, he settled the following rewards for his men, which were to be paid out of their first spoil: For the loss of both legs, fifteen hundred pieces of eight, or fifteen slaves: for the loss of both hands, eighteen hundred pieces, or eighteen slaves: for one leg, or one hand, six hundred pieces, or six slaves: and for an eye, one hundred pieces, or one slave.

In the university library at Edinburgh is preserved a horn, which was cut from the head of Elizabeth Love, in the fiftieth year of her age. It grew three inches above her ear, and was growing seven years*.

It was drawn from the life, at Louse Hall, an alehouse near Oxford, which was kept by this matron, who was well known to the gentlemen of that university, who called her Mother Louse. She was probably the last woman in England that wore a ruff.—Louse Hall seems to be now quite forgotten. Kidney Hall, which a facetious author † tells us was formerly a seminary, is well known. Mother George, who was contemporary with mother Louse, lived in Black-Boy Lane, and afterwards in the parish of St. Peter's in the Bailey, at Oxford. She retained the use of all her faculties to the age of an hundred and twenty years, and was much resorted to by company, from a motive of curiosity. She used to thread a fine needle, as a proof of the goodness of her eye-sight, before her visitants, who generally gave her a gratuity towards her support. She died from the effects of an accidental fall that injured her back*. A genuine picture of her is in the possession of Mr. George Huddesford, late of New College, in Oxford, who, in pursuit of his genius for painting, is now, or was lately, under the instruction of Zoffanij, the celebrated Italian painter.

Madam CRESWELL; M. Lauron del. P. Tempest exc. b. fb. One of the Set of Cries †.

* See Wood's "Life," edit. 2. p. 253, 254, where we are informed, that Mr. Shirley the Terræ Filius of Trinity College, in his speech spoken at Oxford, the 14th of July, 1673, made some reflections upon the studies and pursuits of Anthony Wood, the famous Oxford antiquary, in which his malice and scurrility were much more conspicuous than his wit. As the Latin edition of the "History and Antiquities of the University of Oxford" was then preparing for the press, he said, among other things, that Wood "intended to put two old wives, mother Louse and mother George, into his book; and that he "would not let it be printed because he would not have it new "and common."

† It is probable that some of the drawings for this set of prints were taken in the latter end of the reign of Charles II. as mother Creswell is said to have been a famous bawd of thirty years ago, in the "State Poems," printed 1705. See p. 555, Notes.

This

This infamous woman was, from the natural effects of prostitution in her youth, far advanced in the decline before she had arrived at the meridian of her life. Her great experience in her former occupation qualified her for a procurefs; and she soon became an adept in all the diabolical arts of seduction. She lived in town in the winter, and sometimes retired into the country, where she provided convenient lodgings for her customers, some of whom were persons of distinction. Though she appeared in her real character in the stews, she could assume a very decent behaviour upon proper occasions; and frequently decoyed young unsuspecting girls to London, in hopes of preferment. She kept a very extensive correspondence, and was by her spies and emissaries, informed of the rising beauties in different parts of the kingdom. The trade which she professed was perhaps carried to a greater height at this period than any other. This is plainly hinted at by a man of wit and pleasure, who sometimes dealt with her:

“ To an exact perfection they have brought

A preacher was with some difficulty, found, who undertook the task. He, after a sermon preached on the general subject of mortality, and the good uses to be made of it, concluded with saying, By the will of the deceased it is expected that I should mention her, and say nothing but what was well of her. All that I shall say of her therefore is this: She was born well, she lived well, and she died well; for she was born with the name of Creswell, she lived in Clerkenwell, and she died in Bridewell. In a year or two after her elopement, she married one Day a surgeon, whom she soon forsook, and went into France and Germany, where she learned the languages of those countries, and robbed and cheated several persons. Soon after her return to England, she was married to John Carleton, the son of a citizen in London, who pretended to be a nobleman. This man, as well as many others, is said to have taken her for a German princess, at least a woman of quality. She was soon after tried at the Old Baily, for bigamy, and acquitted: upon this she published an artful vindication of herself, to which was prefixed her portrait. She was afterwards an actress in one of the theatres. The rest of her life is a continued course of theft, robbery, and imposture; in which, as she had a quick invention, great cunning, and an insinuating address, she was, perhaps, never exceeded.—If Mary Carleton had actually been a princess, she had parts sufficient to have thrown a kingdom into confusion; and might have done as much mischief as Catharine de Medicis did in France, or Henrietta Maria in England*. A Man's, my Sex denies me so;

Nature has still Variety,
To make the World her Wisdom know.

She is represented in a fur cap and a man's gown; her beard is very large, and like an old man's; small h. sh.

I saw, in the year 1750, at the palace of St. Ildefonso, in Spain, a portrait of a Neapolitan woman, with much such another beard as Anne Macallame's. I also saw, about four years ago, a woman, at Rotherhithe, with a masculine beard. The largest of these is by no means comparable to that of Barbara Vanbeck, mentioned in the Interregnum.

REMARKS ON DRESS.

The Monmouth, or military cock of the hat, was much worn in this reign, and continued a considerable time in fashion.

The periwig, which had been long used in France, was introduced into England soon after the Restoration.

There is a tradition, that the large black wig which Dr. R. R. bequeathed, among other things of much less consideration, to the Bodleian Library, was worn by Charles II. *

Some men of tender consciences were greatly scandalized at this article of dress, as equally indecent with long hair; and more culpable, because more unnatural. Many preachers inveighed against it in their sermons, and cut their hair shorter, to express their abhorrence of the reigning mode.

It was observed, that a periwig procured many persons a respect, and even veneration, which they were strangers to before, and to which they had not the least claim from their personal merit. The judges, and physicians, who thoroughly understood this magic of the wig, gave it all the advantage of length, as well as size.

The extravagant fondness of some men for this unnatural ornament is scarce credible: I have heard of a country gentleman who employed a painter to place periwigs upon the heads of several of Vandyck's portraits.

Mr. Wood informs us, that Nath. Vincent, D. D. chaplain in ordinary to the king, preached before him at Newmarket, in a long peri-

* "As to the king's more private ordering his family, in the beginning of October, 1666, his majesty, to promote frugality and decency in habit, and to discourage the extravagancy of French fashions, made a solemn and peremptory declaration of the fashion of his apparel, which he resolved to wear for the future. It was strait Spanish breeches; instead of a doublet, a long vest down to the mid leg; and above that a loose coat, after the Moscovite or Polish way; the sword girt over the vest; and instead of shoes and stockings, a pair of buskins or brodekins. Which habit was found to be very decent and becoming to his majesty, and was for a considerable time used and followed by the chief of his courtiers." Eachard's "History of England," ii. p. 236.

wig and Holland sleeves, according to the then fashion for gentlemen; and that his majesty was so offended at it, that he commanded the duke of Monmouth, chancellor to the university of Cambridge, to see the statutes concerning decency of apparel put in execution; which was done accordingly*.

The satin cap and formal screwed-up face, was, for the most part, changed for a more natural and unconstrained aspect §.

The lace neckcloth became in fashion in this, and continued to be worn in the two following reigns.

Open sleeves, pantaloons, and shoulder knots, were also worn at this period, which was the æra of shoe-buckles: but ordinary people, and such as affected plainness in their garb, continued for a long time after, to wear strings in their shoes.

* "Athen. Oxon." ii. col. 1033.

§ Dr. Echard tells us, that we had a great plenty of religious face-makers in the late zealous times †. "Then it was," says he, "that godliness chiefly consisted in the management of the eye; and he that had the least pupil was the most righteous, because most easily concealed by the rolling white. Then it was that they would scarce let a round-faced man go to heaven; but if he had but a little blood in his cheeks his condition was counted very dangerous; and it was almost an infallible sign of absolute reprobation." Nothing is more certain than that black satin caps, tipped and edged with white, were then worn by some divines to give an appearance of languor and mortification to the countenance.

It has been gravely asserted by some presbyterian writers that the cloak is apostolical, as we read that St. Paul left his cloak at Troas †. But, for this very reason, it may be concluded, that he did not constantly preach in it.

The clerical habit which, before it is grown rusty, is a very decent dress, seems not to have been worn in its present form, before the reign of Charles II. †

The ladies hair was curled and frizled with the nicest art, and they frequently set it off with heartbreakers ‡. Sometimes a string of pearls, or an ornament of riband, was worn on the head; and in the latter part of this reign, hoods of various kinds were in fashion.

Patching and painting the face, than which nothing was more common in France, was also too common among the ladies in England §. But what was much worse, they affected a mean betwixt dress and nakedness; which occasioned the publication of a book, entitled, “A just and seasonable Reprehension of naked Breasts and Shoulders, with a Preface by Richard Baxter.”—I scarce ever see a portrait of a lady by sir Peter Lely, but I think of the following passage of Seneca; “Video fericas vestes, si vestes vocandæ sunt, in quibus nihil est quo defendi aut corpus, aut denique pudor possit: quibus sumptis, mulier parum liquido nudam se non esse jurabit*.”

† As to the form of the ancient clerical habit, see in Jo. Johnson's “Collection of Ecclesiastical Laws,” &c. the second continuation of archbishop Stratford, in 1343.

‡ Thiers, in his “Treatise of Perukes,” informs us, that no ecclesiastic wore a band || before the middle of the last century, or a peruke before the Restoration.

§ Artificial curls.

¶ See the prologue to Lee's “Lucius Junius Brutus.”

* Seneca, De Benef. 7. 9.

|| The clerical band, which was first worn with broad lappets, apparently had its origin from the talling band, which is divided under the chin.

It appears from the “Memoires de Grammont,” that green stockings were worn by one of the greatest beauties of the English court.

If any one would inform himself of the dresses worn by our ancestors, he should make his observations in country churches, in the remote parts of the kingdom; where he may see a great variety of modes of ancient standing. It is not unusual among people of the lower classes, for a Sunday coat to descend from father to son; as it is put on the moment before the wearer goes to church, and taken off as soon as he returns home. I have seen several old women in beaver hats, which I have good reason to believe were made in the reign of Charles the Second †.

Bernard de Nogaret de Foix, duke of Espernon and Valette, knight of the orders of St. Michael and of the Holy Ghost, was, in April, 1661, installed knight of the Garter †. He was descended from one of the most illustrious families in France, and added great lustre to his house. The reader is referred for a particular account of him, to “The Life of the Duke of Espernon, englished by Charles Cotton, Esq.” and published in folio, 1670.

CAROLUS XI. Suec. Got. et Vand. rex ;
4^{to}.

Charles XI. king of Sweden, was son of Charles Gustavus, cousin and successor to the famous Christina. He succeeded to the crown in 1660, and was invested with the ensigns of the Garter by Charles Howard, earl of Carlisle, and Henry St. George, esq. Richmond herald. He was a good soldier ; of which he gave some signal proofs in his wars with the Danes, the marquis of Brandenburg, and the duke of Brunswick Lunenburg. He was a prince of great penetration, frugality, and industry ; but proud, selfish, and tyrannical. He deprived the senate of the share in the government which they had formerly possessed, and erected an arbitrary court called “the Chamber of Liquidations,” by which multitudes of his subjects were reduced to extreme poverty and distress. His haughty and severe treatment of his queen, who was one of the best of women, threw her into a distemper that hastened her death. He died the 15th of April, 1697, and was succeeded by his son Charles XII.—

† He was the last knight elected in the reign of Charles I. in which his portrait may be placed.

The queen-regent, his mother, buried him with more pomp than had been seen in Sweden, and obliged her subjects to mourn for him three years.

Christian king of Denmark, and Frederick William, marquis of Brandenburg, surnamed the Great, were also elected knights of the Garter, in this reign.

COSMUS III. magnus dux Etruriæ, &c. Tempesti, Florentinus, del. 1717, J. Simon f. b. sb.

Cosmo de Medicis, (or Medices), prince of Tuscany, having made the tour of Spain and France, came into England in the beginning of the year 1669, where he was treated with great ceremony and respect, especially by the two universities. He was shewn whatever was curious, and visited several persons of rank and eminence, particularly Mr. Hobbes, who made him a present of his works, together with his picture; and the same year, dedicated to him his book, "De Quadratura Circuli."—In 1670 he succeeded his father, Cosmo II. in the dukedom. He married Margaret Louise, daughter of Gaston John Baptist of France, duke of Orleans; by whom he had two sons, and one daughter, namely, Ferdinand, John Gaston, and Mary Magdalen.

JEAN FRANCOIS PAUL DE GONDI, cardinal de Retz, &c. Duflos sc. a small b sb. This has been copied for the Amsterdam edition of his "Memoirs." There is also a head of him by Nantueil.

The cardinal de Retz, who in the early part of his life, affected to be the beau, the gallant, and the duellist, entered into holy orders with reluctance, and purely in obedience to the commands of his father. He was a man of an insinuating address, persuasive eloquence, and vehement thirst of power. Many of the greatest men and women in France were the tools of his wanton ambition, and helped to place him at the head of a faction that expelled Mazarine from the kingdom. He proceeded so far as to set a price upon his head. But his triumph was of short duration: his great and lofty spirit was presently humbled, and Mazarine triumphed in his turn. He was, in the latter part of his life, after the fervour of his passions had spent itself, a truly good and amiable character. He has drawn his own portrait in his "Memoirs," which are numbered with the classic writings of his age and country*. The earl of Clarendon informs us, that he was so ingenuous as to tell Charles II. that if he changed his religion, he would never be restored to his kingdoms †. Yet it is sufficiently evident that he applied to the pope in that prince's behalf, to entreat his holiness to lend him some assistance towards his Restoration ‡. It is certain that the cardinal was in England incognito, soon after that fortunate event §. Ob. Paris. Aug. 24, 1679, Æt. 66.

* Voltaire speaks thus of the author, and his work: "Cet homme singulier s'est peint lui-même, dans ses mémoires écrits, avec un air de grandeur, une impétuosité de génie, et une inégalité, qui sont l'image de sa conduite." Siecle de Louis XIV. vol. i. p. 61.

AMBASSADORS, TRAVELLERS, &c.

HANNIBAL SEHESTED; a small head; A. F. f. in Hofman.

Hannibal Sehested, lord of Tybjerg, and grand treasurer of Denmark, is celebrated in the history of that country, for his valour and conduct as a general, and his knowledge, ability, and address, as a statesman and ambassador. In the reign of Christian IV. he was, for his eminent services, rewarded with the viceroyalty of Norway, where he led the king's forces against the Swedes, with such signal success, that this war is in the annals of Denmark distinguished by the appellation of The War of Hannibal. In the reign of Frederic III. he, for secret reasons, was deprived of his government of Norway, forbidden to appear at court, and degraded from his rank; and the bulk of his fortune was confiscated. In 1655, he retired with his family to Antwerp, where he entered into the service of Charles II. who employed him in several negotiations*. He was afterwards taken prisoner by the Swedes, and was some time with their army which was to act against Denmark. During his captivity, he did Frederic such eminent service, that, when a peace was concluded with Sweden, he was received by him with open arms, and perfectly reinstated in his confidence and favour. He was afterwards sent in quality of ambassador extraordinary to the courts of England and France. Ob. 1666.

Mark Gioe, lord of Brahesborg, who had formerly visited England as a traveller, was sent hither as an ambassador from Denmark, in the reign of Charles the Second. He was afterward employed in the same character, at the courts of France and Spain. During his residence in England, which was about seven years, he became enamoured with Elizabeth Mary Thomfon, a lady of distinguished beauty, wit, and modesty, whom, in 1676, he espoused, but left no issue by her. This polite scholar and able minister died in 1698. He left several poems, speeches, and memoirs of his embassies, in manuscript. Some of his writings are in print: the most considerable is his “Disputatio de optima gerendæ Reipublicæ Forma,” Serœ, 1653, 4to.

This envoy had his audience of the king the 16th of November, 1682. Cornelius Van Tromp was son of the famous Martin Van Tromp, who was shot through the heart with a musket ball, in an engagement with Monck. He did not at all degenerate from his heroic father, who seemed to live ^{July 29,} _{1653.} over again in his no less heroic son. In the first engagement with the English, in 1665, he continued to fight after several of the Dutch admirals were killed, and fought retreating. In the battle between the English and French, and the Dutch fleets, in 1672, De Ruyter went to his assistance after he had shifted his flag to four different ships. This put an end to the animosity which had before subsisted betwixt these great commanders. His father never fought or acted more like a hero, than he did in that memorable engagement with sir Edward Spragge, on the 11th of August, 1673 †. He was created an English baronet 25 Mar. 1674.

CHRISTIANUS HUYGENS, de Zulichem, &c. 4to.

Christian Huygens, who applied himself to the mathematics from his infancy, exhibited a wonderful specimen of his genius in his book entitled, "Theoremata de Quadratura Hyperboles, Ellipsis, et Circuli, ex dato Portionum Gravitatis Centro;" 1651. In 1657, he invented the clock-pendulum, of which he published an account; as he did also of the use of clocks, in the discovery of the longitude. In 1659, came forth his "Systema Saturnium." He, by the help of his brother Constantine, brought telescopes to a much greater perfection than any astronomer had done before him. He was also a great improver of the air-pump. In 1660, he came into England, where he was chosen fellow of the Royal Society. In 1663, he was invited to Paris by Lewis XIV. who appointed him a handsome stipend. He continued at Paris from 1666 to 1681, where he had a noble apartment near the royal library. He grew insane some years before his death, of which he discovered the first symptoms by playing with a tame sparrow, and neglecting his mathematical studies*. He died at the Hague, June 8, 1695, in the 67th year of his age, while his famous book of the Plurality of Worlds was printing †. See Ward's Lives of the Gresham Professors, p. 179.

MARCELLUS MALPIGI, &c. Before his "Opera Posthuma," two volumes, folio.

Marcellus Maipigi, a very eminent physician and naturalist of Bologna, was a great improver of science. He was elected an honorary member of the Royal Society, the 4th of March, 1668-9. He was author of various anatomical treatises; he also wrote "De Formatione Pulli in Ovo." "De Bombyce," &c. He and the excellent poet Vida illustrate each other on the last mentioned subject. A collection of his works, in two volumes folio, with cuts, was published at London, 1636.

I am informed, that there is a print, by Verkolje, of ANTHONY VAN LEEUWEN-HOEK, another eminent naturalist, who particularly distinguished himself by his microscopical observations, and was also elected an honorary member of the Royal Society.

Count Koningsmark was a native of Dresden in Saxony, and the youngest of several sons, though he assumed the titles of the eldest. He served in the army, both in France and Italy, before he came into England; where his handsome person and genteel address soon rendered him acceptable to the ladies. He was a great frequenter of the Dutchess of Mazarine's, where he won considerable sums at play, at which he was remarkably dextrous. He fought the lady Elizabeth Ogle, heiress of the house of Northumberland, in marriage; and is supposed to have suborned three assassins, Uratz, Borofky, and Stern, to murder Thomas Thynne, esq. to whom she was contracted. William, earl of Devonshire, who was firmly persuaded of his guilt, sent him a challenge soon after his trial, which he accepted. They agreed to fight on the sands of Calais, but the count never met his adversary. He is said to have been killed in a quarrel in Hungary, in 1686, in the 31st year of his age; but we are, with more probability, informed, that when king George II. made some alterations in his palace at Hanover, his body was found under a floor †. The three assassins were hanged in Pall-Mall, March 10, 1681-2. Uratz, a weak man, said, that he believed God would forgive him, in consideration of his being a gentleman*.

One of the first and most memorable of his exploits was the bombarding of Genoa, upon a false and frivolous pretence of Lewis XIV. This is one of those actions which impartial posterity will weigh in the same equitable scale with the invasion of the United Provinces and the burning of the Palatinate, and consequently regard it with horror and detestation*. He particularly signalized himself at the battle of Bantry Bay †, in which the English fleet was defeated. He afterwards formed a project of burning the English ships in their ports, and flattered himself that he should have the glory of fixing king James on the throne; but illness prevented his embarkation with the fleet commanded by Tourville, which, when king William was in Ireland, spread terror throughout the kingdom ‡. Seignelay was full of indignation at the ill success of his project, which was soon after effectually defeated by the decisive victory gained by the English fleet at La Hogue. “Memoirs de Grammont,” printed at Strawberry Hill: from an authentic portrait in the collection of Mr. Walpole. It was copied, by a good hand, from the original at the grand Augustins, at Paris, where are heads of all the knights of the Holy Ghost.

The count de Grammont, who had served as a volunteer under the prince of Condé, and Turenne, came into England about two years after the Restoration. He was under a necessity of leaving France, as he had the temerity to make his addresses to a lady to whom Lewis XIV. was known to have a tender attachment. He possessed, in a high degree, every qualification that could render him agreeable to the English court. He was gay, gallant, and perfectly well bred; had an inexhaustible fund of ready wit, and told a story with inimitable grace and humour. Such was his vivacity, that it infused life wherever he came; and, what rarely happens, it was so inoffensive, that every one of the company appeared to be as happy as himself. He had great skill and success in play, and seems to have been chiefly indebted to it for his support. Several of the ladies engaged his attention upon his first coming over; but the amiable Mrs. Hamilton, whom he afterwards married, seems to have been the only woman who had the entire possession of his heart. His elegant “Memoirs,” were written from his own information by count Hamilton*, and probably in much the same language in which they were related.

He wrote one comedy, which had no success in the action; and, what is worse, was universally thought to have deserved none. He was very awkward at displaying his talent in conversation. DANIEL GEORGE MORHOF: C. Fritzsch sc. Before his "Polyhistor," 1732; 4to.

Daniel George Morhof, a celebrated German writer, who is by Menage styled the best poet of his country, was in England in the reign of Charles the Second †. His learning was extensive, his judgment sound, and his taste perfectly refined. Few have been so well acquainted with the various parts of learning, with the methods of attaining them, and the authors ancient and modern, who have written with approbation and applause on the different branches of science. This is abundantly exemplified in his methodical, elaborate, and well-written work, entitled "Polyhistor Literarius, Philosophicus, et Practicus," in three tomes. The first was published in 1687; the other two after his decease. The third edition was printed in 4to in 1732; and the fourth in 1747. It is worth the reader's while to see what John Albert Fabricius says of this author, in his second preface to the third edition of the "Poly-hifter."

GREGORIUS LETI, historicus, &c. *J. Gole sc. 4to. This print, which may be placed here as a memorial of him, was done in the reign of William III. It is in his "Poema Hero-estorico ."

Gregorio Leti, a native of Milan, came into England in the reign of Charles II. by whom he was graciously received. He had a promise of being made the king's historiographer; but as his manner of writing did not please, he received orders to leave the kingdom, and in 1682 retired to Amsterdam. His works, especially his histories and lives, are numerous, and said to be equal in number to the years of his life †. I shall mention only such as relate to England; viz. "Il Teatro Britannico §," printed at London, in two volumes, 4to. and reprinted at Amsterdam, in five volumes 12mo. "La Vita della Regina Elizabetta;" "La Vita di Cromwell;" "Poema Hero-estorico, sopra miracolosa, intrapresa d'Inghilterra, del Real Principe d'Orange." Leti, in his historical works, has much true and interesting history blended and debased with fable. He is one of those writers to whom we know not how to give credit, unless his facts verify them-

* There are several other heads in this book.

† "Spectator," No. 632.

§ Leti being one day at Charles the Second's levee, the king said to him: "Leti, I hear that you are writing the history of the court of England." "Sir," said he, "I have been for some time preparing materials for such a history." "Take care," said the king, "that your work give no offence." "Sir," replied Leti, "I will do what I can; but if a man were as wise as Solomon, he would scarce be able to avoid giving some offence." "Why then," rejoined the king, "be as wise as Solomon; write proverbs, not histories."

selfes, or are supported by much better authority than his own. He, on some occasions, assumes all the dignity of conceited ignorance, and relates his fictions with all the confidence of a vain man, who thinks he cannot be contradicted. His aim, indeed, was to please rather than instruct, and he has, with his anecdotes, frequently amused and misled his readers. Engaging talents in a faithless historian are as dangerous, in the republic of letters, as the agreeable manners of a profligate are in civil society. See more of him in Morery's Dictionary †.

SAMUEL SORBIERE, &c. Audran sc. Romæ; 1667. This has been copied.

Samuel Sorbier was born of obscure parents in France, where he was some time private tutor to a younger son of the count de la Suze, and afterwards an usher to a school. He was educated in the Protestant religion, but reconciled himself to that of Rome, and obtained considerable preferment in the church. He studied physic, history, and philology; was a professed admirer of Mr. Hobbes, whose "Politics" he translated. He also translated sir Thomas More's "Utopia," and part of Camden's "Britannia," for the great "Atlas," printed in Holland. He travelled into Italy, Germany, and the Low Countries, where he insinuated himself into the acquaintance of the literati, of whom Lewis XIV. styled him the Trumpeter. His Elogies of Gassendus, and De Marca, archbishop of Paris are among the most considerable of his works, and helped to gain him the office of historiographer-royal. He was ever of a rambling disposition, and had a strong propensity to pleasure. He came into England in this reign; and it is observable that he travelled from Dover to London in a common stage-waggon. He was graciously received by the king, was elected fellow of the Royal Society, and had many civilities paid him by persons of distinction and eminence. He, in his "Voyage to England," does justice to the characters of some of our learned men; but is frequently partial, false, and injurious in his representations of persons and things. It can scarcely be supposed, that the metropolis, with all its inhabitants, nor indeed Great Britain itself, should make a very considerable figure, when seen through the medium of that vanity which was extremely natural to a French pedant, and one who was then a pensioner to the vainest prince in the world. He died the ninth of April, 1670. The author of his "Life" tells us, that finding his end approaching, he took a large dose of laudanum, on purpose to die in a state of stupefaction. Dr. Sprat has well lashed this conceited pedant with his own rod. See his spirited "Observations on Monsieur Sorbier's Voyage into England," subjoined to that book.

JOBUS LUDOLFUS, serenissimorum Saxonæ Ducum Consiliarius intimus: Bernigerotb sc. Before his "Life," in Latin, by Juncker, 1710, small 8vo.

Job Ludolf, who was descended from a good family, at Erfurt, in Thuringia, was a privy-counsellor to Frederic, duke of Saxony, whose education he superintended. He also bore several honourable employments under the emperor Leopold and some of the electors of the empire. He was a master of music and other elegant accomplishments, had a strong and clear head for business, and acquitted himself with uncommon address as a public minister. But his knowledge as a linguist is almost beyond credibility. He is said to have understood five and twenty languages*, and had undoubtedly a more exact knowledge of the Ethiopic and old Abyssinian than any learned man of his age. He was personally known to Dr. Pococke, Dr. Hyde, and Dr. Edward Bernard, with whom he contracted an acquaintance at Oxford. He also visited Mr. Boyle, Isaac Vossius, Dr. Castie, sir William Dugdale, sir John Chardin, and Mr. Ashmole†, in London. He was able to hold a conversation with these eminent persons in English, having been three times in this country. He came hither twice in the year 1683; once, at least, in pursuit of a scheme which he seems to have had much at heart, and which was greatly approved

* If we may credit his biographer, he learned the Hebrew, Chaldee, Samaritan, Syriac, Armenian, and surmounted almost all the difficulties of the Arabic in one year||. That he spoke the Ethiopic with a proper accent is an acknowledged fact. It is no less certain, that the aptness and facility of his genius for this kind of learning was to the highest degree astonishing. If what is said of him be true, it gives credibility to the story of Hierodotus, who must, however, be deemed his inferior as a linguist. But if he had well understood five only of these languages, he would perhaps have been unrivalled by any ancient or modern: It has, with great appearance of truth been observed, that no man was ever a perfect master of more than one language, which must have been that in which he has been long accustomed to write and converse.

of by Leopold. This was to engage several of the European princes in a treaty of commerce, and a league offensive and defensive with the king of Ethiopia against the Turks, who threatened the empire; and consequently the liberties of Europe. Charles II. received him graciously, paid attention to his proposal, and referred him to the East-India company, from whom he met with no encouragement. He died the 8th of April, 1704, in the eightieth year of his age. Besides an Ethiopic Grammar and Lexicon, he published a "History of Ethiopia," which was translated by J. P. Gent. and printed in folio, in 1684. See more of him in his remarkable "Life," by Christian Juncker, subjoined to which is a curious specimen of the language of the Hottentots.

JACOBUS II. &c. 8vo. in a sheet, with his dying words.

The history of this reign consists of little more than the weak and irregular efforts of a bigotted and tyrannical prince to introduce Popery; an attempt so big with absurdity, that it did not meet with the least encouragement from the Pope himself. The capacity of James was by no means equal to the subversion of those deep and solid foundations which supported the civil and religious liberties of his people. The share which he had in his father's sufferings had not sufficiently taught him, that jealousy

jealousy of the royal prerogative is a fundamental principle in the English constitution. He was so violent and precipitate in his conduct, that he never failed to counteract his own purposes*. Every step he took to advance his power, helped greatly to destroy it; and he established the protestant religion on a firmer basis than ever, by his wild attempts to introduce that of the church of Rome. Though he ascended the throne with almost every advantage, he could never sit easy in it: and having taught even the advocates of non-resistance to resist, he was forced to relinquish a crown which he was absolutely unfit to wear. He fled into France, where the palace of St. Germain was assigned him; but the convent of La Trappe would have been a much more suitable retreat †. He died 6 Sep. 1701. His body was deposited in the monastery of the Benedictines at Paris, his brain in the church of St. Andrew, belonging to the Scotch College, in that city, and his heart in the nunnery of Chaillot. It is well known that he supplied father Orleans with materials to write his history. See the two former reigns.

This princess, who descended from the ancient house of Este, was adopted daughter of Lewis XIV. who presented her with a suitable portion upon her marriage with James, when duke of York. The graces of her person and behaviour gained her all that popularity which usually attends beauty in the most elevated station. But her haughtiness, her bigotry, and her busy and intriguing spirit, sunk her greatly in the popular esteem, after she became a queen. When she fled into France, she was kindly received by Lewis, who treated her with a generosity that did him much honour*. She died at St. Germain, 26 April, 1718 †.

The revenge of the earl of Southesk on king James, when duke of York, who is said to have caught a virulent distemper, which that nobleman communicated with design to his lady, was supposed to be the occasion of the death of several of the children that he had by both his queens*, and gave credit to the report of the prince being a supposititious child. In 1696, was published a pamphlet, entitled, "A Brief Discovery of the true Mother of the pretended Prince of Wales, &c. by William Fuller, Gent. some time Page of Honour to the late Queen, in France." The author tells us, that the pretended prince was son of one Mary Gray, an Irish woman, who, in May 1688, was brought over to England, in the Monmouth yatch, by the countess of Tyrconnel. That she was delivered of a child at St. James's, on the tenth of June following; and about the middle of July was, against her inclination, conveyed to the convent of Benedictine nuns at Paris, whence she soon after made her escape. That he was commanded by the queen to go to England, with letters to lord Montgomery, and others, in relation to this woman; and that they were "to take care to place people on the coast of England, that might inform them when she landed; and then they were positively commanded to use “ all endeavours to get her dispatched, to prevent whatever design she might pretend to.” But being, as he informs us, soon apprehended in France, and effectually secured, he believed that she was murdered; as he could not get the least intelligence of her, though he had made the strictest enquiry. The well known story of conveying the child to the queen’s apartment, in a warming-pan, is attributed to Fuller. But it should be observed, that Mrs. Margaret Dawson, one of the gentlewomen of the queen’s bed-chamber deposed, that “ she saw fire carried into the queen’s room, in a warming-pan, to warm the bed; after which the queen went into her bed; and that the deponent stirred not from the queen until her majesty was delivered of a son*.” Fuller, who was a great dealer in plots, and was detected in several gross falsehoods, in some of his pretended discoveries, was declared an impostor by the house of commons.

At Amesbury is a half length of him by sir Peter Lely.

Laurence Hyde, second son of the lord-chancellor Clarendon, was employed in the late reign, in several important embassies and negotiations; in which he acquitted himself to the king's satisfaction. In 1679, he was appointed first commissioner of the treasury, upon the resignation of the earl of Effex. About the same time, he, with Mr. Sidney Godolphin, was admitted into the privy council; and they both shared the confidence of the earl of Sunderland. This triumvirate had, for some time, the principal management of the king's affairs. He appeared at the head of that party, in the house of commons, who opposed the exclusion of the duke of York. This occasioned an address from that house to the king, to remove him from his presence and council for ever: but he was soon after created baron of Wotton Bassett, viscount Hyde, and earl of Rochester. In the last year of Charles II. he was made president of the council; and upon the accession of James, lord high-treasurer of England. Though he was one of the ecclesiastical commission, he refused to comply with the king's request of changing his religion, which occasioned the resignation of his office of treasurer, in lieu of which he had a pension assigned him of 5000 l. a year. He had much of the elevated spirit of his father, but was greatly inferior to him in capacity. King William, who seems never to have had any cordial affection for him, declared, that the year in which he had the management of his affairs, was the most uneasy of his whole life. Upon the change

George Savile, marquis of Hallifax, who for his eminent abilities was ennobled by Charles II. was by that prince made a privy-counsellor; and afterwards, lord privy-seal †. Upon the accession

* Laurence, earl of Rochester, and Henry, earl of Clarendon, his brother, were the undoubted editors of their father's "History of the Rebellion." This will, perhaps, sufficiently appear from the preface to that work; but it is fully confirmed in Dr. John Burton's "Genuineness of Lord Clarendon's History &c." The following passage, in the same tract §. is too much to the honour of the earl of Rochester to pass unobserved. The author, speaking of Edward, earl of Clarendon, says, "I cannot omit this remarkable circumstance in favour of his innocency, that when the tumultuous perplexed charge of accumulated treasons was preferred against him by the commons, his son Laurence, then a member of that house, stepped forth with this brave defiance to his accusers, that if they could make out any proof of any one single article, he would, as he was authorized, join in the condemnation of his father. It appears that this challenge was not given in vain; and the general good opinion of the world ever since has vindicated the innocency of the unpopular minister, and in a manner, reversed the effect of that arbitrary injurious sentence."

of James, he was appointed president of the council; but as he could not be persuaded to give his consent to the repeal of the tests, he was told by his majesty, that “though he could never forget his past services, yet since he could not comply in that point, he was resolved to have all of a piece;” and was therefore dismissed from his public employments †. In the convention parliament, he was chosen speaker of the house of lords; where, with his usual eloquence, he pleaded for the necessity of supplying the vacant throne with the prince and princess of Orange; upon whose accession, he was again made lord privy-seal. In 1683, he quitted that office, and distinguished himself by his opposition to the measures of the government. He was a man of unsettled principles, and of a lively imagination, which sometimes got the better of his judgment. He would never lose his jest, though it spoiled his argument in the gravest debate; nor though it brought his sincerity, or even his religion, in question. He was deservedly celebrated for his parliamentary talents; and in the famous contest about the bill of exclusion, was thought to be a match for his uncle Shaftesbury. The pieces which he has left us, shew him to have been an ingenious, if not a masterly writer. His “Advice to a Daughter” contains more good sense, in fewer words, than is perhaps to be found in any of his contemporary authors. He, at his death, professed himself a sincere christian, and expressed the truest concern for his misspent life. Ob. April, 1695.

The earl of Mulgrave, better known by his title of duke of Buckingham, was a man of uncommon wit and spirit, and of no less gallantry and politeness. He cultivated an early acquaintance with Dryden, and other men of genius; to whom he was indebted for a much greater share of his reputation than was derived from his personal merit. He lived in great familiarity with James II. when duke of York; and served him with the sincerest attachment, after he ascended the throne. Though he was, in some respects, a man of nice honour, he went greater lengths to serve the king than were consistent with that, or any other social principle. He was not only an advocate for the dispensing power, but he sat in the ecclesiastical commission; not with a view of introducing popery, as he seems to have been at least indifferent to all religions, but purely from a zeal of serving his sovereign. It must, how-however, he acknowledged, that he was far from being inclined to join the inquisitors of that arbitrary court in all their illegal proceedings. Hence it was, that his pardon was with less difficulty procured at the Revolution, by the friendly mediation of Dr. Tillotson, the worthy dean of Canterbury. There are several portraits of him, which belong to the reign of Anne.

In 1683, he was sent admiral to the English fleet to demolish Tangier*; and soon after his return, had a grant from the king of ten thousand pounds. In the reign of James, he was constituted master of the horse, and a privy-counsellor; and was preferred to several other considerable employments. In 1688, he was made admiral of the fleet sent out against the prince of Orange. In 1691, he was sent to the Tower, where he died the twenty-fifth of October, 1691, in the forty-fourth year of his age.

In 1686, the parliament of Scotland was summoned by the king to assemble; and they accordingly met on the twenty-ninth of April, that year. His majesty wrote a letter to them; in which he recommended his Roman catholic subjects to their especial care. The earl of Murray, lord high commissioner, seconded this letter with a speech: which he concluded with these words: "By this, you will shew yourselves the best and most affectionate subjects, to the best, the most incomparable, and most heroic prince in the world." The chief power in Scotland, at this period, says sir John Dalrymple, "was committed to lord Murray, a weak, chancellor Perth, a timid, and the chancellor's brother, lord Mellfort, an unpopular man, all of whom were Roman catholics*."

James Drummond earl of Perth, lord-chancellor of Scotland, was a man of an excellent disposition, till it was warpt and perverted by the violence of ambition*. The loudest, and indeed the justest, clamours were raised against his flagitious conduct; and he was in danger of being called to an account for male-administration, when he thought it prudent to turn Roman catholic: upon which the marquis of Hallifax observed, that his faith had made him whole. He followed the fortunes of king James, by whom he was created a duke, and appointed governor to his son. He died at St. Germain, in 1716.

was, during the rigorous administration of the earl of Middleton, condemned to die, only for a just complaint of the injuries and injustice which had been done him, in a letter to lord Duffus his friend*. This worthy patriot, because he would not blindly concur with all the measures of the duke, and was scrupulous of taking contradictory oaths, was, after a most illegal trial, condemned, by as unjust a sentence, for treason, leasing-making, and leasing-telling. He found means to escape from prison, and rose in arms against his capital enemy, soon after his accession to the throne. This insurrection was concerted with the duke of Monmouth, who entered upon hostilities in England about the same time. The earl was presently taken, and carried prisoner to Glasgow, and afterwards to Edinburgh, where he was beheaded in pursuance of his former sentence, 30 June, 1685. After the Revolution, this sentence was, in the Claim of Rights, declared to be a reproach to the nation. See more of him in the "Biographia," article CAMPBELL.

The duke of Somerset, who was one of the lords of the bed-chamber to the king, was dismissed from his office for refusing to assist at the public reception of count D'Ada, the Pope's nuncio, at Windsor †. We are told by sir John Kereby, that the duke of Somerset, the earl of Burlington, the earl of Scarisdale, and some other lords, who had been active in the cause of the prince of Orange, seemed in some measure to repent of their activity; as "they never could have believed the prince would have contended for the crown; but all agreed in opinion it was to be set on the head Echard, in his "History of the Revolution †," where he mentions the precipitate conduct of James, which naturally produced that great event, speaks thus of the reception of the nuncio. "While these strange proceedings were depending, the king thought fit to make a step of another kind, and give an unusual spectacle to his subjects, which was a solemn reception of an apostolical nuncio from Rome, a sight which had not been seen in England for a hundred and fifty years before. This was signior D'Adda, domestic prelate and assistant to the pope, to complete whose character he was consecrated archbishop of Amasia, in the royal chapel at Whitehall, by three select Romish bishops. And though it was high treason in England for any to assume the character of the pope's nuncio, that law was dispensed with at this time; and he made his public entry at Windsor, with the highest pomp and ceremony." The same author tells us, that "the duke of Somerset, then lord of the bed-chamber in waiting, was expected to assist in the ceremony; but he told the king he could not serve him upon this

Christopher, duke of Albemarle, was a generous, indolent, good-natured man, who sunk a considerable part of the estate which his father left him, and shortened his own life, by indulging himself in his pleasures, especially those of the bottle. He was the chief promoter of captain Phipps’s † famous scheme of fishing on a Spanish wreck off Hispaniola, by which 300,000 l. in silver were recovered from the bottom of the sea, where it had lain forty-four years. The attempt of the duke of Monmouth to raise himself to the throne was no less absurd than that of James to change the religion of the three kingdoms. He landed, with a few of his followers, in the West, where he was greatly beloved by the people, who regarded him as the rightful heir to the crown*. He soon found himself at the head of a numerous body of plowmen, graziers, and mechanics; who behaved, at the battle of Sedgemoor, much better than could have been expected from such a rabble of undisciplined soldiers. This was in a great measure owing to the intrepidity and conduct of the duke †. The defeat was occasioned by lord Grev retreating with the cavalry, which were thrown into confusion by the noise

As this curious and valuable work is become very scarce, and consequently sells at a high price, a second edition of it would be very acceptable to the world, and especially to the lovers of botany. The numerous plates of the plants, which are in general finely executed, are, I think, in the British Museum.

His head was severed from his body at the fifth stroke, by a timid and unskilful executioner, who probably sympathized with the weeping spectators. Exec. 15 July 1685.

JAMES FITZ JAMES, natural son to the king, by Arabella, sister to the lord Churchill, was created duke of Berwick 19 March, 1686-7. In the beginning of the year 1687, the earl of Oxford was commanded by the king to exert himself in his lieutenancy, in order to a repeal of the test and penal laws: upon this he very frankly told his majesty, that he could not persuade others to that from which he was in his conscience averse. This nobleman, when he saw that other men of sense were at their wits end, in the arbitrary and tyrannical reign of James, thought it prudent to assume the character of a madman, as the first Brutus did in the reign of Tarquin. He went to dinner at six or seven of the evening, and his meal lasted till six or seven the next morning; during which time he eat, drank, smoked,

The company that dined with him were at liberty to rise and amuse themselves, or take a nap, whenever they were so disposed; but the dishes and bottles were all the while standing upon the table. Such a man as this was thought a very unlikely person to concern himself with politics or religion. By this conduct he was neither embroiled in public affairs, nor gave the least umbrage to the court. But he exerted himself so much in the Revolution, that he was for his eminent services created duke of Bolton. He afterwards raised a regiment of foot for the reduction of Ireland. Ob. 26 Feb. ^{9 April,} 1689._{1689.}*

His uncle, the famous marshal Turenne, who knew and practised every part of generalship, never treated his prisoners in this manner. When the king was alarmed with the prince of Orange's design to invade the kingdom, he made the earl of Feversham general of the army; which he afterwards took care to disband with all possible expedition, to prevent its revolting to the prince. It is well known that Edward of Windsor, eldest son of Edward II. was summoned by his father to parliament by the appellation of earl of Chester and Flint; and that this title has since belonged to the princes of Wales. I was once inclined to think that the title of earl of Flint might be a ridiculous sarcasm on Jefferies, occasioned by his extreme hardness of heart, till a learned and curious gentleman in my neighbourhood communicated to me the dedication of the following book: "Dissertatio Lithologica. Lord Delamer was son of the loyal sir George Booth, who rose in arms for Charles II. a little before the Restoration. He was a man of a generous and noble nature, which disdained, upon any terms, to submit to servitude ; and whose passions seemed to centre in the love of civil and religious liberty. The principal evidence was one Saxton, an obscure fellow of an infamous character †. But the lords gave no credit to this evidence, and the prisoner was unanimously acquitted. He was then employed in reducing the west of Scotland, and in forcing the dissenters to comply with the constitution of the established church, by imposing heavy taxes upon them, which was one of the methods of making profelytes in that kingdom. But he was a man of too noble a nature to execute his orders in their full rigour. At the time of the prince of Orange's invasion, he was commanded to march with his regiment into England. He advised the king to three things. One was, to fight the prince; another, to go to him in person, and demand his business; and the third, to make his way into Scotland. James had once resolved to pursue the last advice; but that, in the fluctuating state of his mind, was soon followed by another resolution. Upon the king's departure, Dundee applied himself to the prince of Orange, to whom he spoke with all that frankness which was natural to him; but met with a very cool reception. He afterwards sat in the Scottish convention, from which he suddenly absented himself, declaring that he had discovered a plot against his own life. He soon after retired into the Highlands, with about forty horse, which he had formerly commanded, and presently assembled a numerous army. He marched to Gillicranky*, where he engaged a large body of forces commanded by general Mackay, but was mortally wounded in the engagement. The Highlanders, animated by their commander, gained a signal victory. Upon his asking how things went, he was told that all was well: "then," said he, "I am well," and presently expired. He was a man of an enterprising genius, and his conduct was equal to his courage. He had a good deal of the spirit of his uncle, the famous James Graham, marquis of Montrose. Ob. 6 July 1689. great service to it. It was reasonably supposed, that a man of so reclusive and speculative a turn, was very unlikely to disturb the court in their designs upon the religious liberties of the people. His deprivation was probably a matter of no great mortification to him; as he had raised an estate in the see of Canterbury, which was more than sufficient for one of his retired disposition. Such is the character of this prelate, as drawn by a contemporary writer, who would have considerably softened the harshness of the features, if he had been more like Sancroft, who had a generous and enlarged heart to objects of benevolence. He was highly respected, and great deference was paid to his judgment by the prelates, his fellow-sufferers, in that difficult and dangerous conjuncture for the church which preceded the Revolution: his conduct was indeed judicious and exemplary upon that trying occasion*. He gave a thousand pounds towards rebuilding the deanery house of St. Paul's, and was very assiduous in procuring the coal act for rebuilding the cathedral. He bequeathed his valuable library, which he once intended to leave to his successors in the archbishopric, to Emmanuel College in Cambridge, where he received his education, and of which he had been master.

* After the archbishop had left Lambeth and retired to a private house in town, Thomas, earl of Ailesbury, went thither to make him a visit. The prelate received him at the door of his apartment, which was opened by himself. The earl, struck with this circumstance of humiliation, and the total change of the scene in which he had frequently seen him at his palace, burst into tears. As soon as he recovered the power of speech, he told him how deeply he was affected with what he saw, and of his inability to suppress his grief. "Oh, my good Lord, replied the venerable confessor, "rather rejoice with me; for now I live "again." This anecdote was communicated by John Loveday, esq. who had it from the earl himself.

Some of these pieces will set his character, as a writer, in a fair point of light. Such are, "Modern Policies;" but such more particularly, his "Familiar Letters to Mr. North;" both before, but principally after his Depri"vation, and his Retirement to the place of
 "his Nativity in Suffolk," Lond. 1757, an octavo pamphlet. See the Index to the State Letters of Henry, earl of Clarendon, sub. voc. Canterbury. See more of him in Burnet's "History," i. p. 392, and in Birch's "Life of

In 1672, he was preferred to the deanery of Rochester: and in 1676, advanced to the bishopric of Exeter. Upon the landing of the prince of Orange in the West, he, in a public address to the clergy and gentry of his diocese, exhorted them to adhere to king James: but, upon the approach of the prince of Orange, he fled with precipitation from Exeter to London, and was presently after made archbishop of York. || The following is a remarkable instance of his spirit. King James discoursing with him on some tender point, was so little pleased with his answers, that he told him, "He talked more like a colonel than a bishop." To which he replied, "that his majesty did him honour in taking notice of his having formerly drawn his sword in defence of the constitution; and that he should do the same again, if he lived to see it necessary." Accordingly, when matters were coming to extremity, he carried off the princess Anne to Nottingham, and marched into that town at the head of a fine troop of gentlemen and their attendants, who had formed a guard for her highness.

He was of all the prelates the most compliant with the king's measures, and was justly esteemed the grand inquisitor of the ecclesiastical commission. He expressed great satisfaction upon his admission into this court, that his name would be recorded in history*; and so indeed it will to his dishonour, even as long as his munificence to the university of Oxford is commemorated. He was hospitable, generous, and charitable; but his charity was sometimes observed to be too ostentatious. He offered to resign his bishopric to Dr. Burnet, and trust to his generosity for the payment of 1000 l. a year out of it: but he was of too scrupulous a conscience to accept it upon any such terms. He sent the king an address of thanks for his declaration for liberty of conscience; and is said to have written reasons for reading that declaration. rector of Tilehurst in Berkshire. He was master of as much, and as well digested knowledge, as any clergyman of his time. Whatever he knew, he generally knew better than other men; and was better able to display it to advantage. He was never desultory in his studies, but always mastered one branch of science before he applied himself to another. His memory was prompt, his imagination lively, and his judgment exact. He seemed to be as great a proficient in philology, history, philosophy, and divinity, as if each of these had been the sole object of his application. He was a principal reformer of the language and method of sermons; and was an admirable master of the historic style. It is much to be regretted, that so excellent a pen should have been chiefly employed in subjects of controversy, the most perishable of all writings. He supplied a great part of the materials for Dr. Burnet's "History of the Reformation," and had a great hand in polishing that excellent work. His "Chronologia Universalis," in folio, which was the most laborious of all his performances, was partly printed, but never published*. It hath already been remarked, that his Index to bishop Wilkins's "Real Character" is a master-piece in its kind. It should also be observed, that his various studies never broke in upon his parochial or episcopal duties, in which he was

He received his education at New College in Oxford, was some time chaplain to the king, when duke of York, and a residentiary of St. Paul's. In 1670, he was preferred to the mastership of St. John's College in Cambridge; in which preferment he succeeded Dr. Peter Gunning and was himself succeeded by Dr. Humfrey Gower. He was afterwards preferred to the deanery of Windsor, which he held together with the bishopric of Rochester. He was deprived for not taking the new oaths, 1 Feb. 1689-90. The next year he was accused of being a conspirator in a plot of nonjurors for restoring king James, for which some of that party were imprisoned; but he thought it prudent to abscond. A proclamation was soon after issued for apprehending him, Graham, and Penn, as traytors.— Dr. Turner, who was an affected writer, was author of “Animadversions on a Pamphlet, entitled, The Naked Truth;” of several sermons; and “Letters to the Clergy of the Diocese of Ely.” But the most remarkable of his pieces is his “Vindication of the late Archbishop Sancroft and his Brethren, the rest of the de-

* While he was chaplain in the prince of Orange's court, he obliged one of his highness's favourites to perform his contract, by marrying a young lady of the princess's train, whom he had seduced by means of that contract. This gave great offence to the prince. But Charles II. was not offended at his religious intrepidity, in peremptorily refusing to admit Nell Gwynn into his lodgings, when the court was at Winchester: on the contrary he soon after made him a bishop. The king's good sense told him, though the prince of Orange's did not, that if a man is really a Christian, his conduct ought to be uniformly consistent with that character; and that principles of conscience are of too stubborn a nature to yield, even in courts, to modes of complaisance.

Hence some of his pious poems are entitled "Andynes, or the Alleviation of Pain." Thomas Sprat, bishop of Rochester, was a man of wit, and a polite scholar; and one of the most generally admired of our English writers. It appears from his writings, as well as his conduct, that his principles were far from being stubborn. He has represented Cromwell as a finished hero*, and Charles I. as a glorified faint †. He sat in the ecclesiastical commission, and was by no means averse from the Revolution. His “ Account of the Rye House “ Plot” is little better than a romance; but his “ History of the Royal Society,” his Charge to his Clergy, his Sermons, and his Account of Cowley, are excellent performances. His style in general, which has been greatly applauded, has neither the classic simplicity of Hobbes, nor the grace of sir William Temple.
 His poetry is unequal, and sometimes inharmonious. He has, however, been justly ranked with the best writers in the reign of Charles the

Jonathan Trelawney was a younger son of sir Jonathan Trelawney, of Pelynt, in Cornwall. Confec. 8. Nov. 1685. But his elder brother dying in 1680, he inherited the title of baronet. He was a man of polite manners, competent learning, and uncommon knowledge of the world. He was a true son and friend of the church; and exerted himself with courage and alacrity, with magnanimity and address, in defence of her just rights and privileges. He was friendly and open, generous and charitable; was a good companion, and a good man. He was successively bishop of Bristol, Exeter, and Winchester. He had as much personal intrepidity as his predecessor in the last of these sees †, and was, in all other respects, much his superior. Thomas Cartwright, who had been a forward and confident preacher at the time of the Interregnum, and proceeded in exact conformity with the powers then in being, struck in with the royal party at the Restoration, and was no less forward upon all occasions to express his loyalty. He was made one of the king's chaplains; was successively a prebendary of St. Paul's and of Durham, and had a hard struggle with Dr. Womack, for the bishopric of St. David's. In the reign of James, he enlisted himself on the side of the prerogative*, and was made bishop of Chester for boldly asserting in one of his sermons, that the king's promises to his parliament were not binding. It is probable, that on such slavish terms he might have been made archbishop of Canterbury, if that prince had continued on the throne. He sat in the ecclesiastical commission, and was one of the judges sent by the king to intimidate the fellows of Magdalen College

* Dr. Welwood tells us †, that "Charles II. was the first king of England that ever aimed at any thing like a dispensing power." But it is certain that sir Edward Coke allowed that there is a dispensing power in the crown. Perhaps he durst not have asserted the contrary in the reign of a prince so jealous of his prerogative as James I. was. But, be that as it may, the constitution was visibly changed on the side of liberty, since that period. See Hume's "History," under the reign of James II.

Upon the Revolution, he fled into France, where he officiated as minister to the protestant part of the king's household. Upon the death of Seth Ward he became titular bishop of Salisbury. James, who looked upon him as neither protestant nor papist, had little or no esteem for him. He died of the flux in Ireland, whither he had followed the royal adventurer, the fifteenth of April, 1689. His "Speech spoken to the Society of Magdalen College," and several of his sermons, are in print. He was, in the early part of his life, inclined to the Presbyterians, among whom he was extolled as an excellent preacher; a character which he well deserved, and in which he had very few equals. John, lord Roberts, happening to hear him preach, was so taken with his discourse, his person and his manner, that he retained him as his chaplain, when he was sent in quality of

When that nobleman was recalled, he so strongly recommended Mr. Hopkins to lord Berkeley, his successor, that he was soon preferred to the bishopric of Raphoe, whence he was translated to Derry. During the war under the earl of Tyrconnel, at the Revolution, he withdrew into England, and was chosen minister of St. Mary Aldermanbury, in London; where he died on the nineteenth of June, 1690, and lies buried in that church. His "Sermons," his "Exposition of the Ten Commandments," and that on the "Lord's Prayer," were in good esteem. His works were printed together, in 1710, fol. against the church of Rome, was sent for by the king, who did his utmost to mollify him, and prevail with him to lay down his pen. But he told his majesty, with a resolution that never failed him when he thought his duty was concerned, "that he could not give up a religion so well proved as that of the protestants." He and Dr. William Jane had afterwards a conference in the king's presence with Giffard a doctor of the Sorbonne, and Mr. Tilden, who went by the name of Dr. Godden. The subject of this dispute was, "The rule of faith, and the proper judge of controversy." The popish doctors were pursued through all the intricacies of sophistry, and so closely pressed by their antagonists, that they were fairly put to silence. The king left them very abruptly, and was heard to say, that "he never saw a bad cause so well, nor a good one so ill maintained."

Dr. WILLIAM SHERLOCK, who was justly esteemed one of the greatest ornaments of the London clergy at this time, is supposed to have written more pieces against popery than any of his contemporaries. His adversary, Dr. South, who afterwards engaged with him in a very warm dispute concerning the Trinity, was forced, in an indirect manner, to acknowledge his merit in the popish controversy, though he would allow it in nothing else*. He was a more vehement writer than Dr. Patrick.

* His words are, "This character I shall give of him, as a writer, that there is hardly any one subject which he has wrote upon, (that of popery only excepted), but he has wrote for and against it too." South's Animadversions," &c. p. 18.

JOHN HOUGH*, afterwards bishop of Worcester. His portrait belongs to several of the succeeding reigns.

I shall only observe here, that one Farmer, a man of little note, and less honetty, but a new convert to popery, was by the king proposed as president of Magdalen College in Oxford; and that the fellows of that society, in direct opposition to the royal mandate, which was never before heard of in any election, chose Mr. Hough; who asserted his own right, and that of the univerty, with a firmness and spirit conformable to that dignity of character which he sustained through the whole course of his life. He was removed by the ecclesiastical commissioners, 22 June, 1687, the day on which he was admitted to his doctor's degree, to make room for Dr. Samuel Parker, bishop of Oxford.

GILBERTUS BURNET, S. T. P.
Æt. 44, 1687; R. White sc. b. sb.

Gilbert Burnet, some time chaplain to Charles II. incurred the resentment of the court, in the latter end of that prince's reign, by the openness of his conduct in regard to popery. This resentment was much encreased by a sermon preached at the Rolls chapel, 5th Nov. 1684, on Psalm xxii. 21. "Save me from the lion's mouth; thou hast heard me from the horns of the unicorns." The text was thought to be a bold allusion to the supporters of the royal arms, though the conceit, as he tells us, was never intended. The sermon was also thought to be in as bold a strain; and especially where he mentioned the famous wish of James I. against any of his posterity that should endeavour to introduce the Roman-catholic religion. Upon the accession of James II. he very prudently left the kingdom, and travelled over Italy, Switzerland, and part of Germany. He returned to England with the prince of Orange, and had no inconsiderable share in the Revolution.

THOMAS BURNET, doctor of laws, the celebrated theorist, resolutely opposed an illegal attempt of James II. to impose one Andrew Popham, a papist, as a pensioner upon the Charter-house, of which he was master. His portraits belong to the next reign ||.

NON CONFORMISTS.

RICHARD BAXTER was tried by the lord chief-justice Jefferies for reflecting upon bishops, in his "Paraphrase on the New Testament;" for which he was fined five hundred marks, to lie in prison till the fine should be paid, and to give security for his good behaviour for seven years. See the preceding reign.

|| In a tract, written by Dr. Thomas Comber, entitled "Frequent and fervent Prayer, according to Scripture and primitive Usage, as it is now practised by the pious Members of the Church of England," 1687, the author at p. 23, informs us, that the prayers of the church were "better frequented than ever;" and that the dissenters went to their places of worship with "diligence and zeal." This account of the state of religion is confirmed by bishop Atterbury, in one of his Sermons, vol. i. p. 260, &c.

There are, at least, two more prints of him; one by White, another by Faber, both in 8vo.

Increase Mather, minister of the Old Church, and president of Harvard College, at Boston, in New England, was an Independent minister of considerable eminence. He was author of “Epistola ad Joannem Leusdenum, de Successu Evangelii apud Indos in Nova Anglia,” 1688, 8vo. “Some important News about Conversion, delivered in sundry Sermons,” 1674, 8vo. The writings of this author and Cotton his son, relative to the New England Witches, made a great noise in the world, and are, to this day, matter of astonishment to those who read the history in detail, with the various attestations of the facts*.

* “The Wonders of the Invisible World,” &c. written by Cotton Mather, contains an account of the trials of several witches executed in New England, together with many strange anecdotes concerning them. In this book, which is now before me, the author tells us, that the witches, according to their own confession, “form themselves much after the manner of congregational churches, and they have a baptism and a supper and officers among them, abominably resembling those of our Lord.” “In all the witchcraft,” saith he, “which now grievously vexes us, I know not whether any thing be more unaccountable than the trick which the witches have to render themselves and their tools invisible ¶.” “*One of our bewitched people was cruelly assaulted by a spectre that, she said, ran at her with a spindle, though no body else in the room could see either spectre or spindle. CLERGYMEN of the CHURCH of ROME.

There is a print, by Claude du Bosc, of BON-AVENTURE GIFFARD; which was done in 1719, and in the 77th year of his age. Though it properly belongs to the reign of George the First, it may, as a memorial of a person of merit, be placed in the reign of James, as he, during that period, was consecrated bishop of Madaura, a city of Africa †, and was appointed, by royal mandate, president of Magdalen College, in Oxford, and accordingly took possession of his stall by proxy ‡. He was much esteemed by men of different religions, and especially by those who were most intimately acquainted with his character. It is certain, that he died at Hammer-smith, in the reign of George the Second, aged about ninety. The dates of his age assigned by Dod and others, at the time of his death, differ considerably from the æra on his print, which is very probably right.

“sent beheld that it was indeed a real, proper, iron spindle, being longing they knew to whom; which, when they locked up very safe, it was, nevertheless, by dæmons unaccountably stole away to do further mischief.” He mentions a similar instance of a woman who tore from the back of a spectre a piece of an invisible sheet, which immediately became visible before a room full of spectators*. The same author saith, “Nineteen witches have been executed at New England; one of them was a minister, and two ministers more are accused. There are a hundred witches more in prison, which broke prison; and about two hundred more are accused: some men of great estates in Boston, have been accused for witchcraft. Those hundred now in prison, accused for witches, were committed by fifty of themselves, being witches; some of Bolton, but most about Salem and the towns adjacent †.”

There is a print of Hugh Peters, with a windmill, &c. over his head, inscribed "Father PETERS."

Edward Petre, a man of an easy and insinuating address, was at the head of the Jesuits who frequented the court in this reign. He was not destitute of parts; but his vanity and ambition, rather than his bigotry, were much an overpoise for his judgment, and helped greatly to precipitate the king's ruin, especially after he was sworn of the privy-council. This step was absolutely against the consent of the queen and the most judicious of the catholics. James, in a letter to the pope, made it his request, that his holiness would raise him to the episcopal dignity, or bestow on him a cardinal's hat †. He was at this time the king's confessor.

The Letters of Father Petre, La Chese (Chaife) and another Jesuit, concerning the affairs of England, appear to be apocryphal.

There were other noted clergymen of the same communion at this period, but I have seen no portraits of them; particularly father Fitzgerald, who was sent by James to convert the duke of Buckingham in his sickness. The duke published an Account of the Conference betwixt them, in which the doctrine of Transubstantiation is humourously ridiculed. I lately met with "The first Sermon preached before their Majesties in English, at Windsor, on the first Sunday of October, 1685, by the Rev. Father Dom. P. E. Monk of the holy Order of St. Benedict, and of the English Congregation; published by his Majesty's Command," 1686; 4to. The next is Matt. xxii. 37. There are at least four more such sermons, preached in English before the king and queen, by Philip Ellis. Dr. Welbore Ellis, who died bishop of Meath, and was father to Welbore Ellis, esq. now living, was brother to this Philip Ellis. Justice Ellis of Westminster was another of the brothers. Father Couplet, erroneously called “ The converted Chinese,” was a Jesuit who was sent as a missionary to China, where several of his fraternity had met with toleration, if not with encouragement. STATE POEMS.

‡ However bloody an instrument he was of arbitrary power; yet that he was no friend to popery will appear from the following anecdote, communicated by the Rev. Mr. Gosling, of Canterbury, which I give the reader in that gentleman's own words:

"One day, while he was chancellor, he invited my father home with him from the king's chapel, and enquired whether there were not a building at Canterbury called the Sermon-House, and what use was made of it. My father said it was the old Chapter House, where the dean, or his representatives, might convene the choir once a fortnight, and hear the chanter's account how well the duty had been attended in that time. "This," said he, "will not do;" and explained himself by the western assizes, after the defeat of Monmouth, juries were overborne, judgment was given with precipitation; even the common legal forms were neglected, and the laws themselves openly trampled upon, by a murderer in the robes of a lord chief-justice*. He returned triumphantly to London, and was received with open arms by the king †, who soon after placed him at the head of the highest tribunal in the kingdom ‡. He was taken in disguise at Wapping, 12 Dec.
"saying,

“saying, that the presbyterians had then a petition before the king and council, asking it, as a thing of no use, for their meeting house. On this my father told him, that if it were made a chapel for the early prayers, and the choir reserved purely for cathedral service, this would be a great convenience, and the Sermon House would be daily in use. This will do,” said the chancellor. “Pray, let the dean and chapter know as soon as possible, that I advise them to put it to this use without delay;” adding, “if the presbyterians do not get a grant of it, others, perhaps, will, whom you may like still worse.” His advice was taken, and it has been the morning-prayer chapel ever since.”

* I have seen an old woman, who kept a little alehouse in the West, kindle into rage, and melt into pity, upon relating the cruelties of Jefferies, and the catastrophe of Monmouth. I concluded that she caught both these passions from her mother, who, she told me, “was an eye witness of the shocking barbarities of those lamentable times.” It is remarkable that the late countess of Pomfret met with very rude insults from the populace on the western road, only because she was grand-daughter of the inhuman Jefferies.

† King James called the western circuit Jefferies's campaign.

‡ His behaviour, both in private and public, was very inconsistent with the character of a lord chancellor. Sir John Reresby informs us, that he once dined with him, when the lord mayor of London and several other gentlemen were his guests; and having drunk deeply at dinner, he gave a loose to that inclination to frolic which was natural to him. He called for Mountfort his domestic, who was an excellent mimic; and he, in a sham-cause, took off, as the modern phrase is, all the great lawyers of the age, in the most ridiculous manner. The same author adds, that he had like to have died of a fit of the stone, which he brought upon himself by a furious debauch of wine at Mr. Alderman Duncomb's; where he, the lord treasurer, and others, drank themselves to such a pitch of frenzy, “that among friends
“it was whispered that they had stripped into their shirts; and

He was made lord chief-justice of the king's bench in September 1683, and lord chancellor, on the 28th of that month, 1685. The next year he was appointed one of the ecclesiastical commission.

Sir ROBERT WRIGHT, lord chief-justice of England, who tried the seven bishops, in 1688: J. Rily p. R. White sc. large b. sb.

Sir Robert Wright, who descended from a good family at Thetford, in Suffolk, was handsome in his person, of a voluble tongue, and plausible behaviour; but voluptuous, extravagant, and abandoned. Though he had much practice, he was but superficial in the knowledge of his profession. He mortgaged his estate for 1500 l. to Mr. North, afterwards lord-keeper, and again to sir Walter Plummer, for 500 l. before he had paid off the former mortgage; and made no scruple to swear, that the same estate was clear from all incumbrances. He was made a judge by the interest of Jeffries; though the lord-keeper had before told the king, that he was the most unfit person in the kingdom to act in that character *. As he was the creature, so he was the tool of Jefferies. He had his share of the western massacre, in the visitation in Magdalen College, in the ecclesiastical commission, and other arbitrary and tyrannical proceedings. He died miserably in Newgate, in the beginning of the reign of William; having been confined "for endeavouring to subvert the government."

“that had not an accident prevented them, they had got up on a sign post to drink the king's health; which was the subject of much derision, to say no worse.” Rereby's “Memoirs,” 4to. p. 130, 131.

Sir THOMAS JONES, lord chief-justice, &c. R. White sc. 1685. See the reign of Charles II.

It appears from Salmon's "Chronological Historian," that sir Thomas Jones was appointed lord chief-justice of the common-pleas, upon the accession of James. SIR ROBERT SAWYER.

Sir Robert Sawyer, one of the ablest of his contemporaries in his profession, formed himself after the lord chief-baron Hale *, under whom he practised, and of whom he was a just admirer. He, like that excellent person, was a man of general learning, and of an integrity that nothing could corrupt. His reputation in the court of exchequer, the business of which he perfectly understood, was superior to that of any other counsel. He was attorney-general from the year 1681, to 1687; during which period, he approved himself in some very delicate points, and upon many important occasions, a most judicious and expert lawyer, and a no less useful man. He was continued in his office by James, but was soon set aside by that prince, who presently perceived that he could not be prevailed with to mould the laws to such purposes as were never intended by the legislature. He has been justly censured for his harsh treatment of lord Russel on his trial. Pemberton, on the contrary, treated him with a gentleness and candour that did him much honour. He died at Highcleer, in Hampshire, 1692. His only daughter married the earl of Pembroke. She died 17 Nov. 1706.

The Hon. HENEAGE FINCH.

Heneage Finch, who was younger brother to Daniel, earl of Nottingham, was made solicitor general, the thirteenth of January, 1678; from which office he was removed by king James, in April, 1686; and "one Powys was appointed in his stead, who was ready and willing to do what the other refused †." He was, in this reign, member of parliament for Guilford, in Surrey. On the twenty-sixth of October, 1714, soon after the accession of George I. he was created earl of Ailesford. Ob. 22 July, 1719.

JOHN SOMERS, Esq.

It should be observed, that all the lawyers who pleaded as counsel for the bishops, were men of uncommon eminence in their profession. Mr. Somers, in particular, displayed an eloquence on that occasion, worthy of Athens or Rome, when they produced their most finished orators; and an honest zeal for liberty, no less worthy of those republics, when they produced their most distinguished patriots. See the next reign.

† Reresby's "Memoirs," p. 133.

The judges, Powell and Holloway, opposed the dispensing power, in the trial of the bishops, with a spirit worthy of the cause in which they were concerned. They had the honour of being dismissed from their employments, the next day after those venerable confessors were acquitted.

life, when he devoted the greatest part of his time to experiments. He was much admired for his general knowledge, and his ease and openness in the communication of it. There was nothing at all promising in his appearance: he was hard-favoured, affected plainness in his garb, walked the street with a cudgel in his hand, and an old hat over his eyes. He was often observed to be in a reverie; but when his spirits were elevated over a bottle, he was remarkable for his presence of mind, and quickness of apprehension, and became the agreeable and instructive companion. The king, when he had resolved to introduce popery, thought it expedient to be in a military posture; and that the army should be augmented with men of that religion. Great numbers of soldiers were accordingly brought over from Ireland. On the tenth of September, 1688, lieutenant col. Beaumont, capt. Paston, and four other captains of the duke of Berwick's regiment, were cashiered, by a council of war held at Windsor, for refusing to admit Irishmen into their companies. He married Mary, eldest daughter of sir Nicholas Stewart, of Hartley Mauduit, Hants, bart. by whom he left issue James of Pilewell, and Charles, who was bred to the law.—There is a mezzotinto print of Thomas Worsley, esq. by Becket, after a painting of Kneller. This gentleman was probably of Hovingham, in Yorkshire, and ancestor to the present surveyor-general of the board of works.

He had scarce time to recover from his surprize, before he was brought to his trial, where he convinced every unprejudiced person of his innocence. The prosecution was carried on with such precipitation, that he was tried, condemned, and executed within a week. He behaved to his death with a decent fortitude, and persisted in denying the crime of which he stood convicted. The perjury of Goodenough and Rumsey, the witnesses against him, appeared so flagrant after his death, that, in 1688, they were committed to prison by order of parliament *, and his estate was restored to his relations †.

Benjamin Hewling, son of an eminent Turkey merchant in London, was a man of a good education, graceful person, untainted morals, and unaffected piety ; and therefore of great popularity among his political brethren, the staunch whigs in the city. He had the command of a troop of horse in the duke of Monmouth's army, and behaved in several skirmishes with more courage and conduct than is usually seen in raw soldiers. He was sent with a detachment of his own troop, and two more, to fetch cannon from Minehead in Somersetshire, a little before the battle of Sedgemoor. As the best of Monmouth's men were in this detachment, the loss of the battle was supposed to be owing to their absence. He was executed for rebellion at Taunton, the 30th of Sept. 1685, in the twenty-second year of his age. He declared, a little before his execution, that he was not ashamed of the cause in which he was to suffer, and died with all the alacrity of a martyr. His brother William, a man of a similar character, was executed about the same time.

What has been related by several writers, of the ill treatment of the sisters of these gentlemen, particularly of Hannah Hewling *, is contradicted by Mr. Hewling Luson, in the third volume of the "Letters by John Hughes, esq. and other eminent persons deceased," published by Mr. Duncombe †. Mr. Luson's account of the Cromwell family, in this volume, should be compared with that written by Dr. Gibbons, and subjoined to his Sermon on the death of William Cromwell, esq. July 9, 1772.

* Major Richard Cromwell, son of Henry, and grandson of Oliver, married Hannah, sister of Benjamin and William Hewling. William Kyffin, father of Mrs. Hewling, their mother, was a merchant of eminence. This person, who was thought to have considerable influence in London, was therefore sent for to court by king James, who told him, that "he had put down his name as an alderman in his new charter. "Sir," replied Kyffin, "I am a very old man; I have withdrawn myself from all kind of business for some years past, and am incapable of doing any service, in such an affair, to your majesty or the city.—Besides "sir," (the old man went on, fixing his eyes stedfastly upon the king, while the tears ran down his cheeks) "the death of my grandsons gave a wound to my heart which is still bleeding, and never will close but in the grave. was, in the early part of his life, introduced into the service of the state by his kinsman the famous earl of Sandwich. It is well known that the naval history of Charles II. is the most shining part of the annals of his reign; and that the business of the navy was conducted with the utmost regularity and prudence, under Charles and James, by this worthy and judicious person. He first reduced the affairs of the admiralty to order and method; and that method was so just, as to have been a standing model to his successors in his important office. His "Memoirs" relating to the navy is a well written piece; and his copious collection of manuscripts, now remaining, with the rest of his library, at Magdalen College in Cambridge, is an invaluable treasure of naval knowledge. He was far from being a mere man of business; his conversation and address had been greatly refined by travel. He thoroughly understood and practised music; was a judge of painting, sculpture, and architecture; and had more than a superficial knowledge in history and philosophy. His fame among the virtuosi was such, that he was thought a very proper person to be placed at the head of the Royal Society, of which he was some time president*. His prints have been already mentioned. His collection of English ballads, in five large folio volumes, begun by Mr. Selden, and carried down to the year 1700, is one of his singular curiosities †; as is also the pedigree of Edward IV. from Adam. He was a man of uncommon knowledge, of amiable manners, and a just pattern of private and public virtue. He was charitable without ostentation, religious without bigotry; and so acquitted himself in the several duties and relations of life, as not only to avoid evil, but even the appearance of it; not only to escape censure, but to gain and deserve praise and honour. Such a character may perhaps be overlooked by some, because there is nothing remarkably striking in it. But the man who is uniformly good, and that to such a degree as Mr. Bonnel was, ought to stand high in our opinion, and to be esteemed what he certainly was, a great man. Ob. 28 April, 1699. Dr. Francis Bernard, who was physician to king James, was a man of learning, and well versed in literary history. He had the best private collection of scarce and curious books that had been seen in England, and was a good judge of their value. He died on the 9th of February, 1697, in the 70th year of his age. The catalogue of his books, which were sold by auction, is dated 1698. The amount of this auction, clear of all expences of sale*, was upwards of sixteen hundred pounds, a large sum at that time, when the passion for rare books was much more moderate than it is at present. If all Dr. Mead's books were now to be refold, they would fetch an incomparably greater sum than they did soon after his death. Mr. Charles Bernard, brother to Francis, and surgeon to the princess Anne, daughter of king James, had also a curious library, which was sold by auction, in 1711. The "Spaccio della Bestia triomfante," by Jordano Bruno, an Italian atheist, which is said, in Numb. 389 of the "Spectator," to have sold for thirty pounds, was in this sale. The late Mr. James West is erroneously said to have possessed the individual copy. An English edition of it was printed in 1713 †.

* These expences were about four shillings in the pound.

† See Ames's "Typographical Antiquities," p. 356. We are there assured, that the book was sold, at Mr. Charles Bernard's sale, to Walter Clavel, esq. for 28 l. It also appears in the same page, that Mr. West had not the copy which was sold at Mr. Bernard's auction. Ames, at p. 352, informs us, upon the authority of Mr. Thomas Baker, that Jordano Bruno's book was printed in England, by Thomas Vautrollier, in the year 1584.

DANIEL KENRICUS, medicus; Æt.

The plate is in the possession of John Ives, junior, esq. of Great Yarmouth, Norfolk.

Dr. Kenrick practised as a physician at Worcester. He seems to have been no graduate, nor very able in his profession; but was esteemed a man of wit, and a jolly companion. These lines, "Upon a Giant angling," printed in the fifth volume of Dryden's "Miscellany," are said to have been written by him:

His angle rod made of a sturdy oak,
 His line a cable that in storms ne'er broke,
 His hook he baited with a dragon's tail,
 And sat upon a rock and bob'd for whale*.

The Effigies of GEORGE JONES, to whom God hath given the Gift of Healing; Drapentier f. 4to.

* From the information of Dr. John Wall.—Kenrick, like many others, seems to have fathered some lines which he never wrote, and probably borrowed wit as freely as he did receipts. He appears to have adopted the two last verses, which are thus printed, in a poem called "The Mock Romans," published with several others, at London, in 1653:

His hook was baited with a dragon's tail,
 And then on rock he stood to bob for whale.

I have heard different accounts of Jones, which I know not how to reconcile, and therefore shall not attempt it. It is certain, that his head is prefixed to a long account of his "Friendly Pills," which, as he tells us, are "the true Tincture of the Sun," and make patients of all complexions laugh at the time of taking them, and cure all curable distempers.

JOHANNES CASE, M. D. natus Lime in com. Dorset.

JOHANNES CASE, M. D. in a sexangular frame.

John Case, a native of Lime Regis in Dorsetshire, was many years a noted practitioner in physic and astrology. He was looked upon as the successor of the famous Lilly, whose magical utensils he possessed. These he would sometimes expose in derision to his intimate friends; and particularly "the dark chamber" and pictures, whereby Lilly used to impose upon people, under the pretence of shewing "them persons who were absent*." The doctor is said to have got more by this distich than Dryden did by all his works:

"Within this place Lives doctor Case."

He was doubtless very well paid for composing that which he affixed to his pill-boxes:

* "Biographia," p. 2968.

“Here’s fourteen pills for thirteen pence,
“Enough in any man’s own con-ſci-ence.”

I think he was living in the reign of Anne. He was author of “The Angelical Guide, ſhewing Men and Women their Lot and Chance in this elementary Life,” in four books, 1697, 8vo. *

POETS,

* This is one of the moſt profound aſtrological pieces that the world ever ſaw. The diagrams would probably have puzzled Euclid, though he had ſtudied aſtrology. I have ſeen the doctor’s head paſſed into a port-folio, amidſt theſe ſtrange diagrams, with the following motto:

Immediately after the unintelligible hieroglyphic, inſcribed “Adam in Paradife §.” is this paſſage, which I have ſelec- ted as a ſpecimen of the work:

“Thus Adam was created in that pleaſant place Paradiſe, about the year before Chriſt 4002, viz. on April 24, at twelve o’clock, or midnight. Now, this place Paradiſe is in Meſopotamia, where the pole is elevated 34 deg. 30 min. and the ſun riſeth four hours ſooner than under the elevation of the pole at London. Now, our curious reader may be inquisitive concerning this matter. If you will not credit theſe reaſons laid down, pray read Joſephus; there you will ſee ſomething of this matter, viz. of the fiſt primum mobile, or moving poſture of the world, and place of Paradife, and elevation of its pole. Many controverſies have been about the time and ſeaſon of the year, therefore I ſhall not trouble my reader any further with them. Let the ſcripture be our guide in this matter: Let there be, (ſaith the word) and there was: and alſo the fifth day’s work of the creation, when the graſhoppers were, and the trees ſprang out; this may give us to underſtand that the time of the creation muſt have its beginning in the ſpring. Now for the place or centre of the earth, from whence we may obſerve the poles as afore mentioned in Meſopotamia, where God placed Adam: ſo the ſpring is two months ſooner there than here with us, under the elevation of the pole at London ¶.”

This paſſage is ſo unconnected with any thing elſe, except we ſuppoſe ſome abſtrute meaning in the hieroglyphic, that it muſt be preſumed to be ſelf-evident, or elſe the author muſt have acted like James Moore §, as it is intimated in the following dialogue between that author and his reader:

POETS, HISTORIANS, &c.

DRYDEN, who had panegyric for all characters, and religion for all changes of the times, turned Roman Catholic upon the accession of James. He displayed all the zeal of a new convert in his "Hind and Panther," in which he paid extravagant compliments to the church of Rome, and spoke altogether as contemptuously of the church of which he lately professed himself a member. It was remembered at this time, that he, but few years before, wrote the tragedy of the "Spanish Friar." See the preceding reign.

An anonymous portrait, to the knees, of a man crowned with laurel, writing at a table. On his forehead is a maggot. Underneath are these verses :

In's own defence the author writes ;
Because, when this foul maggot bites,

R. What makes you write and trifle so ?

M. Because I've nothing else to do.

R. But there's no meaning to be seen.

M. Why that's the very thing I mean.

It is certain that this book suited some men of an heteroclite genius, who fancied that they discovered strange mysteries in many parts of it. The following authentic anecdote of Case was communicated to me by the Rev. Mr. Golling, in these terms :

" Dr. Maundy, formerly of Canterbury, told me, that, in his travels abroad, some eminent physician, who had been in England, gave him a token to spend at his return with Dr. Radcliffe and Dr. Case. They fixed on an evening, and were very merry, when Dr. Radcliffe thus began a health : " Here, brother Case, to all the fools, your patients." " I thank you, good brother," replied Case ; " let me have all the fools, and you are heartily welcome to the rest of the practice †."

† It is observable, that in Mr. Pope's account of the phrensy of John Dennis, Dr. Case is sent for to attend him. It should also be observed, that, as his name was latinized to Casius, it was, upon no slight ground, supposed by some foreigners to have been Cleese.

He ne'er can rest in quiet ;
 Which makes him make so sad a face,
 He'd beg your worship, or your grace,
 Unlight, unseen, to buy it.

This print represents SAMUEL WESLEY, who was, in early life, possessed with the spirit of poetry, as he, in 1685, published in 8vo. a collection of his juvenile compositions, entitled "Maggots, or Poems on several Subjects never before handled." He afterwards entered into holy orders, and was rector of South Ormesby, in Lincolnshire, when he published "The Life of our Blessed Saviour Jesus Christ," an heroic poem, 1693, fol. with various cuts, said to have been engraved by Faithorne. He, in 1695, published Elegies on the death of queen Mary and archbishop Tillotson*. It is to be regretted that his vein of poetry was not exhausted when he published his "Maggots," as he incurred the censure of Garth in his "Dispensary," who severely lashes him in these lines :

Had Wesley never aim'd in verse to please,
 We had not rank'd him with our Ogilbys.
 Still censures will on dull pretenders fall :
 A Codrus should expect a Juvenal.

He, however, made ample amends for his bad poetry, by his good life, and his Dissertations upon the book of Job in Latin, which were published after his decease. He was father of John Wesley, well known to the world by his preaching and writings.

This performance is an illustrious proof of the power of the human mind; it being the highest instance that can, or probably ever will be given of the exertion of it. His portrait belongs to the reign of Anne.

There is a print of him engraved by Bickham, which may be placed as a memorial in this reign: It is a head radiated like the sun, in the midst of a planetary system. This artist painted a window at University College in Oxford, in the year 1687. It is well known that the art of painting on glass was commonly practised in England before the Reformation: and it appears from a series of dates taken by Mr. Walpole from windows now in being, that it has been also practised in every age since that period. Peter Oliver painted on glass in the reign of Charles II. and the two following reigns; John Langton †, in the reign of Anne; Price and Rowell ‡, were prac-

* Mr. Thoresby, in the Catalogue of his Museum, numbers among his rarities “the picture of Mr. Henry Gyles, the famous “glass-painter, of York, wrought in mezzotinto, when that art “was known to few others, by the celebrated Mr. Francis Place.” This, he says, he bought, with other curiosities, of Mr. Gyles’s executors. Among Dr. Litter’s papers, in Ashmole’s Museum, is a letter written by Gyles, in which he complains with great sensibility of having been defrauded by some of the English nobility. He was once inclined to leave his country, which, as he says, had “spit in his face for forty years together.”

† John Langton was an ingenious writing-master at Stamford in Lincolnshire. In 1713, he presented a most curious piece of writing, in the ancient and modern hands, to queen Anne. There is a fine copy of this at Burleigh House. It is said in a manuscript note belonging to this piece, that he retrieved the art of glass painting.

‡ John Rowell, who was by profession a plumber, practised glass painting at High Wycomb, in the county of Bucks, and afterwards at Reading in Berkshire. He was employed by the late duke of Richmond at Goodwood, and executed many pieces for Dr. Maddox, late bishop of Worcester; particularly a history of Christ praying in the garden, after the design of Dr. John Wall, of Worcester §. He painted a set of windows for Dr. Scawen Kenrick, in the church of Hambleton in Buckinghamshire. He did the nativity of Christ, and the Roman charity, in two large windows: the former was purchased of his widow by Mr. Chute, of the Vine, in Hampshire; the latter by the late lord viscount Fane. The colours, in some of his paintings, stand very well; in others they have been observed greatly to fail. He discovered the Catharine Sedley was a woman of a sprightly and agreeable wit, which could charm without the aid of beauty, and longer maintain its power. She had been the king's mistress, before he ascended the throne; and was, not long after, created countess of Dorchester. Sir Charles Sedley, her father, looked upon this title as a splendid indignity, purchased at the expence of his daughter's honour †. The king continued frequently to visit her, which gave great uneasiness to the queen, who employed her friends, and especially the priests, to persuade him to break off his amorous correspondence. They remonstrated to him the guilt of such a commerce, and the reproach it would bring on the Catholic religion. She, on the contrary, employed the whole force of her ridicule against the priests and their counsels; but without success. They, at length, prevailed with him to forsake her; and he is said to have "sent her word, either to retire into France, or to have her pension of 4000 l. a year withdrawn ‡." It was then, probably, that she repented of having been the royal mistress:

"Yet Vane could tell what ills from beauty

 "And Sedley curs'd the form that pleas'd the "king."

† Sir Charles, who was very active against the king about the time of the Revolution, said, that in gratitude he should do his utmost to make his majesty's daughter a queen, as he had made his own a countess.

‡ Reresby's "Memoirs," 4to. p. 131.

She understood dress, and was expensive in it to a degree of extravagance. She had by the king a daughter named Catharine, who was first married to James, earl of Anglesey, and afterwards to John Sheffield duke of Buckinghamshire and Normanby. This lady has drawn her own character to as great advantage as that of the duke her husband is drawn in the dedications of Dryden, and other panegyrics of his contemporary poets*. The countess, her mother, who was "a spy to government," and in danger of being impeached for treason in the reign of William †, espoused David, earl of Portmore, by whom she had issue two sons. She died at Bath, 26 Oct. 1717.

This lady was the second of the three daughters and coheirs of John Wilmot, earl of Rochester. She was married to Edward, the third earl of Sandwich, who dying in 1729, left her a widow. She lived to a very advanced age, and died, not many years since, at Paris, where she spent the latter part of her life. I was told by an honourable person who knew her well, that she inherited a large portion of her father's wit and vivacity †. The earl of Rochester had a son named Charles, who died 12 November, 1681; upon which the title became extinct. It was afterwards conferred upon Laurence, vii-

HENRIETTA MARIA, Lady WENTWORTH, Baroness of Nettlestead, the only Daughter and Heir of Thomas, lord Wentworth, Grandchild and Heir of Thomas, earl of Cleveland; Kneller p. R. Williams f. whole length; large h. sb.

Lady Harriot Wentworth, a woman of an elegant person and engaging manners, was well known to the world as the mistress of the duke of Monmouth. This criminal attachment was, for a considerable time, supposed to have been maintained with constancy, at least on her side. The duke acknowledged, just before his execution, to two prelates and other divines who attended him, that "he had an affection for " lady Herriot, and prayed that if it were " pleasing to God, it might continue; other- " wise, that it might cease; and God heard " his prayer." Lord Brandon, together with the earls of Huntingdon and Shaftesbury, the lords Grey of Werk, Ruffel, and Cavendish, and several gentlemen of distinction, in the late reign, presented the duke of York as a popish recusant, at the king's bench bar in Westminster-hall. He was one of the partizans of the duke of Monmouth, and was tried and condemned for the concern he had in his rebellion; but was reprieved by the king the second of December, 1685: the fifth of that month had been assigned for his execution. This was the most signal, if not the only act of James's clemency. He was tried and condemned but few years before, for breaking a

This young lady was descended from an ancient family long seated at Skeffington, in the county of Leicester. She was, as I am informed, daughter of sir William Skeffington, bart. and sister of sir John, who was created viscount Massareen, of the kingdom of Ireland, by Charles II.* He was one of the privy-council to king James, who made him governor of the county of Londonderry, and the town of Colerane.

Madam ANNE WINDHAM; a girl sitting by a vase of flowers; W. Wissing p. J. Becket f. mezz.

Quære if a daughter of sir William Windham, who was advanced to the dignity of a baronet by Charles II. This gentleman was father of sir Edward, and grandfather to sir William, who was deservedly celebrated for his parliamentary talents. I have heard it remarked by a person who was well acquainted with the history of the family, that he never knew a poor man, or a plebeian, of the name of Windham.

It has been conjectured, that the lady represented by the print may be a daughter, or of the family of Mrs. Anne Wyndham, who, in the latter end of the reign of Charles II. published an account of that prince's concealment, at the house of colonel Windham, her husband, at Trent, in Somersetshire, soon after the battle of Worcester. The relation was written by the colonel, and is subjoined to

Dr. Swift, in his character of lord Wharton, tells us, "that he bore the gallantries of his lady with the indifference of a stoic; and thought them well recompensed by a return of children to support his family, without the fatigues of being a father."

CLASS XII.

PERSONS remarkable from a single Circumstance in their Lives.

TITUS OATES, in the pillory; over his head is the anagram of his name, "Testis ovat," sarcastically applied; b. sb.

There are two prints of him in the pillory. At the bottom of one is a vignette, in which is a representation of the whipping of him at the cart's tail: about him are the Jesuits whom he caused to be executed. In the other, which is a half-sheet mezzotinto, is the gallows with the devil on it, at a little distance from the pillory.

8 May,
1685.

The notorious Titus Oates was, soon after the accession of James, convicted of perjury, upon the evidence of above sixty reputable witnesses, of whom nine were protestants. He was sentenced to pay a fine of two thousand marks, to be stripped of his canonical habit, to be whipped twice in three days by the common hangman, and to stand in the pillory at Westminster-hall gate, and at the Royal Exchange. He was moreover to be pilloried five times every year, and to be imprisoned during life. The hangman performed his office with uncommon rigour. The best thing James ever did, was punishing Oates for his perjury; and the greatest thing Oates ever did, was supporting himself under the most afflictive part of his punishment with the resolution and constancy of a martyr. A pension of 400*l.* a year was conferred upon this miscreant by king William. He was, for a clergyman, remarkably illiterate; but there have been published under his name, "A Nar" rative

“ rative of the Popish Plot;” “ The Merchandise of the Whore of Rome;” and “ Eikon Basilike, or a Picture of the late King James.” It is well known that he was the son of an anabaptist; and he probably died in the communion in which he had been educated*.

The Squire of Alfatia; M. Lauron del. Tempest exc. a whole length, in a hat and feather, and laced neckcloth, sword, cane, &c. The print belongs to the Set of Cries published by Tempest.

The 'Squire of Alfatia, which was very probably done from the life, means one of the gamesters of White Friars, which was notorious for these pests of society, who were generally dressed to the extremity of the mode. Their phraseology abounded with such words as are sometimes introduced by pretenders to politeness and “ dunces of figure,” whom Swift reckons among the principal corrupters of our language. The reader may see much of this jargon, which indeed requires a glossary to understand it, in Shadwell's comedy, entitled “ The Squire of Alfatia,” which was brought upon the stage in this reign.

succeeding reign. He was an odd figure of a man, and was extremely fantastical in his dress. He was attended by a monkey, which he had trained up to act the part of a jack-pudding; a part which he had formerly acted himself, and which was much more natural to him than that of a professor of physic.

This man, whose name was Philips, was some time a fiddler to a puppet-show; in which capacity he held many a dialogue with Punch, in much the same strain as he did afterwards with the doctor his master upon the stage. As this zany was regularly educated, he had confessedly the advantage of the generality of his brethren—I shall take the liberty to observe here, that some sagacious critics have discovered very evident traces of the ancient drama in the dialogue betwixt Punch and the fiddler; in which the former answers to one or more of the actors, and the latter to the chorus. The origin of farce has been attributed to the “entertainment exhibited by charlatans and their

“buffoons in the open street to gather the “croud together*.”

HUGH MASSEY, inscribed, “The Merry Fiddler;” M. Lauron delin. P. Tempest exc. b. sb. One of the set of Cries.

This fellow, who was a vile scraper upon as vile an instrument, picked up a much better subsistence by playing about the streets of London, than several of his brethren of the string. There are many to whom bad music is accommodated: it is no more necessary to play well to please the ears of the common people, than it is to write well to hit the level of their understandings.

JOSEPHUS CLERICUS, posture-masterius; M. Lauron p. P. Tempest exc. b. sb. One of the set of Cries. He is represented extremely distorted.

Joseph Clark, of Pall Mall, was undoubtedly the most extraordinary posture-master that ever existed. Though a well-made man, and rather gross than thin, he exhibited, in a most natural manner, almost every species of deformity and dislocation. He frequently made himself merry with the taylor, whom he employed to take measure of him in one posture, which he changed for another when his cloaths were brought home †. He dislocated the vertebræ of his back, and other parts of his body, in such a manner, that Molins * the famous surgeon, before whom he appeared as a patient, was shocked at the sight, and would not so much as attempt his cure. He often passed for a cripple upon persons with whom he had been in company but a few minutes before. Upon these occasions, he would not only change the position of his limbs, but entirely alter the figure of his countenance. The powers of his face were more extraordinary than the flexibility of his body. He would assume all the uncouth faces that he saw at a quaker's meeting, the theatre, or any other public place. He died about the beginning of king William's reign †.

The famous Dutch Woman; two prints; one represents her dancing on a strained, the other vaulting on a slack rope. M. Lauron del. P. Tempest excub. sb. One of the Set of Cries.

When the Dutch woman first danced and vaulted on the rope in London, the people beheld her with pleasure mixed with pain; as she seemed every moment in danger of breaking her neck. She was afterwards exceeded by Signora Violante, who not only exhibited many feats which required more strength and agility of body than this woman was mistress of, but she had also a stronger head, as she performed at a much greater distance from the ground than any of her predecessors. Signor Violante was no less excellent as a rope dancer ‡. The spec-

Signor and Signora Spinacuta are not inferior to the Turk. The former danced on the rope, not long since †, at the Little Theatre in the Haymarket §, with two boys tied to his feet. But what is still more extraordinary, a monkey has lately performed there, both as a rope-dancer and an equilibrist, such tricks as no man was thought equal to, before the Turk appeared in England*.

This pretty sprightly girl, whose name was Kate Smith, is represented dancing with her milk-pail on her head. She is dressed in a white hood; over which is a narrow-brimmed black hat; on each shoulder is a knot, and she holds a white handkerchief in her right-hand. The bass and treble voices of Seyley and his boy were generally heard in the streets, about six o'clock in the morning. None of our diurnal novelists or biographers have yet given us any real or imaginary memoirs of chimney-sweepers. But they have given us the lives of persons who, in the eye of reason, were of a much lower rank. Devil Dick was, in the strictest propriety of speech, of a much blacker, and consequently a meaner character than any chimney-sweeper*. There is one of this occupation now living in Great Windmill Street, who keeps his one horse-chaise: I expect every day to hear that he has purchased a country house.

I ſhall conclude this volume with obſerving, that lord Bacon has ſomewhere remarked, that biography has been confined within too narrow limits ; as if the lives of great perſonages only deſerved the notice of the inquiſitive part of mankind. I have, perhaps, in the foregoing ſtriſtures, extended the ſphere of it too far : I began with monarchs, and have ended with ballad-fingers, chimney-fweepers, and beggars. But they that fill the higheſt and the loweſt claſſes of human life, ſeem, in many reſpects, to be more nearly allied than even themſelves imagine. A ſkilful anatomift would find little or no difference, in diſſecting the body of a king and that of the meaneſt of his ſubjects ; and a judicious philoſopher would diſcover a ſurpriſing conformity, in diſcuſſing the nature and qualities of their minds*.

Æneas Sylvius, afterwards pope Pius II. who was a native of Corsignano, in the territory of Sienna, was descended from the Piccolomini family. He succeeded Calistus III. in the pontificate, to which he was a singular ornament. He was an excellent poet, a persuasive orator, a wise politician, and a pious, honest, and benevolent man. He was employed in the capacities of secretary, vice-legate, and legate, in several embassies. It appears, at p. 443, of his works, that he was in Scotland in the reign of James I. He was successively bishop of Triesta and Sienna, and was advanced to the purple in 1456; and soon after, on the foot of his merit, to the papal throne. He had himself a particular regard to merit in conferring dignities. One of his favourite maxims was, that "Men ought to be presented to dignities, and not dignities to men." He died the 13th of August, 1464. His prose works, in Latin, which contain 1086 pages in folio, were printed at Basil, in 1571. Prefixed to this volume are Lives of him, written by different hands.

bein, in the royal collection. These were the first spirited sketches for portraits of some of the principal personages belonging to the court of Henry VIII. The author of this book, who was permitted to compare several of these prints with the drawings, found a striking resemblance between them, especially those which were faintly tinged. The ten already published are two of Edward, prince of Wales, and a third when he was king; sir Thomas More; judge More, his father; J. Ruffel, lord privy-seal †; sir Henry Gudeford, controller of the household, &c. Fitz-Williams, earl of Southampton; Francis, lord Ruffel, afterwards earl of Bedford; and archbishop Warham. Mr. Dalton intends to prosecute this very valuable work, which will be sold at an easy price. NICHOLAS HILLIARD, Æt. 30. 1577; from a limning at Penshurst. T. Chambers sc. In the “Anecdotes of Painting,” 4to.

Nicholas Hilliard, who was bred a goldsmith, applied to painting in miniature, in which art he chiefly formed himself upon the smaller pieces of Holbein, but never rose to all their excellence. Hilliard had the honour of contributing to the formation of Ifaac Oliver, a greater genius than himself. Two of his works, which are in the possession of Simon Fanshawe, esq. bear ample testimony to his merit. Dr. Donne has immortalized him by a very slight sketch:

—————a hand or eye
By Hilliard drawn is worth a history
By a worse painter made——

He was miniature-painter and engraver of medals to James I. who granted him a privilege by patent for engraving the heads of the royal family. I have seen a set of counters of the kings of England in silver, which were probably engraved by himself and several other artists who worked under him. In this set were the heads of James and the princes Henry and Charles, neatly executed by Simon Pafs, who assisted him in these works. He died January 7, 1619. See more of him in the "Anecdotes of Painting."

P. 297. l. 7. from the bottom, place the two following articles before that of Gomarus.

CHARLES UTENHOVIUS, of Ghent, of whom there are several prints, was distinguished by his writings in verse and prose. He was a friend and correspondent of Turnebus, and was of a similar genius with that great man. He seems to have travelled into England from a motive of curiosity. It is certain, that queen Elizabeth, who was well acquainted with, and knew how to value his talents, found employment for his pen, and rewarded him with unusual liberality. His works consist chiefly of poems, in Greek and Latin, on a variety of subjects. He died at Cologne, in the year 1600. See more of him in the "Dictionnaire de Moreri."

PIERRE DE BOURDEILLE, Seigneur de Brantôme: J. V. Schley sc. 1740, 12mo. In the 15th tome of his works.

Peter Bourdelle, abbé of Brantôme, by which name he is generally distinguished, was, in the former part of his life, a man of uncommon curiosity curiosity and spirit, which carried him not only through most parts of Europe, but into Africa and Greece. He enjoyed the countenance and favour of several royal and noble personages; and was an acute and nice observer of men and manners; but was particularly inquisitive into the character and conduct of the female sex. He is best known to the world as the biographer of gallant and illustrious women, and has given us memoirs of some great ladies whom he personally knew, and drawn their principal and most characteristic features from the life. For this he was particularly qualified in the instance of his unhappy mistress, Mary, queen of Scots, whom he saw in the morning of her beauty, and admired in the meridian of her splendor; nor was he a stranger to that thick and settled cloud of misfortune, guilt, and misery, that almost totally eclipsed the remainder of her life. He, together with several of the French nobility, accompanied Mary to Scotland, and returning to France through England, was, by his curiosity, detained some time in London. He died about the year 1600. The reader who is inclined to know more of his personal history, is referred to the account of him prefixed to the 15th tome of his works, or to his article in Moreri's "Dictionary*." In Jebb's 2d folio "De Vita et Rebus gestis Mariæ Scotorum Reginæ," occurs all that Brantôme has written of that princess. "Mary Stuart, Queen of Scots, being the secret History of her Life, &c. translated from the French," 8vo. 2d edit. 1626, is, as I am informed, from the original of the same author.

On a table is a helmet, with a large crest of bristles and ostrich's plumes; a small h. sh. I have seen some proofs of this print without the inscription: these were taken when the plate was much worn.*

There is an octavo print of him, by Vaughan, which has been mistaken for a portrait of his son, who was beheaded.

James, marquis of Hamilton, was a distinguished favourite of king James, who, before he was twenty-one years of age, appointed him one of the gentlemen of his bed chamber, and a lord of his privy-council. He was afterwards made steward of his majesty's household, and, in 1619, created a peer of England, by the title of baron of Innerdale, in Cumberland, and earl of Cambridge. In 1621, he was appointed lord high commissioner of the parliament of Scotland. On the 7th of July, 1623, he was installed knight of the Garter. He was naturalized in England by act of parliament. He died in 1625. See more of him in Douglas's "Peerage of Scotland," p 333.

Richard Kingston should be here mentioned with distinction and honour, as he, in the midst of the dreadful pestilence, when, "thousands fell on his right hand, and ten thousands on his left," appeared to be under the peculiar care of Providence. He, at this time, as he informs us in his preface, was occupied "by day in visiting the sick, and by night in burying the dead; having no time for study but what he extracted from his natural rest."

ARTICLE I.

JAMES the Third, King of Scots, and his Queen; ancient originals, at Kensington palace.

ROBERT VERE, Duke of Ireland*; at Penhurst, in Kent.

GEORGE, Duke of Clarence, is at the same place. The earl of Huntingdon has another.

The great TALBOT, Earl of Shrewsbury, and his Countess; two most ancient pictures on board, at the earl of Northampton's, at Castle Ashby, in Northamptonshire.

The first Duke of Norfolk, who was killed at Bosworth-Field; at Worktop, the seat of the duke of Norfolk.

REIGN of HENRY VIII.

Queen CATHARINE PARR; at the earl of Denbigh's, at Newnham, in Warwickshire.

* Created by Richard II. See his article, in the history of the Vere family, in the "Biographia Britannica," vi. p. 4024.

At the Queen's House, in the library, are the curious portraits of the Court of Henry VIII. &c. by Holbein *.

JAMES V. King of Scots, and his Queen; at the duke of Devonshire's, at Hardwick. Mr. Walpole has a copy of it in water-colours.

CHRISTINA, Dutchess of Milan, who refused to marry Henry VIII. † at Workfop.

Prince ARTHUR; at Mr. Sheldon's, Weston, Warwickshire.

The Duke of Richmond, natural Son of Henry VIII. at Strawberry-Hill.

Sir THOMAS WYATT; at Mr. Walpole's.

REIGN of EDWARD VI.

The Marquis || of Winchester; at Mrs. Pawlet's.

* Some of these have been mentioned in another place, as having been etched and published by Mr. Dalton. Among those which are not yet published †, are Queen Anne Bolen; Queen Jane Seymour; the Lady Mary, afterwards Queen; the Lord Chancellor Rich; the Earl of Surrey; John Colet, Dean of St. Paul's; Sir Thomas Wyatt; John More, Son of Sir Thomas; the Dutchess of Suffolk; the Countess of Surrey; and Lady Elyot.

† As the dutchess was never in England, her portrait, in strict propriety, cannot be placed in the English series. When a marriage with Henry was proposed to her, she declined the overture, declaring, that if she had two heads, one of them should be at his highness's service.

|| Created by Edward the Sixth. Mr. Tyson has etched his portrait from another picture, done when he was far advanced in years. The print is not sold in the shops.

ANNE STANHOPE, Dutchess of Somerset, the Protector's Wife; at Strawberry-Hill.

REIGN of MARY.

JOHN DUDLEY, the great Duke of Northumberland; at the duke of Dorset's, at Knowle, in Kent.

ELEANOR, Countess of Cumberland, Sister to the Dutchess of Suffolk, Mother of the Lady Jane Grey; at lord Strafford's at Wentworth Castle, in Yorkshire.

CATHARINE GREY, Sister of Lady Jane; at Warwick Castle.

REIGN of ELIZABETH.

Mr. Walpole has seen a picture of Lord Treasurer BURLEIGH, and three other Lords, playing at cards, which would make a large print; but does not recollect where he saw it.

Sir JOHN PERROT, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, supposed natural Son of Henry the Eighth; at Strawberry Hill. The original is at Sir Henry Packington's.

THOMAS, Earl of Southampton, Lord Essex's friend; at the dutchess dowager's of Portland; at Bulstrode, Bucks*.

MARY, the learned Countess of Arundel, at Mr. Sheldon's at Weston, in Warwickshire †.

REIGN of JAMES I.

HENRY HOWARD, Earl of Northampton; at lord Carlisle's, Castle-Howard, Yorkshire. There is another at Knowle, in Kent.

The great Earl of Clare *; at the duke of Portland's, at Welbeck.

CECIL, viscount Wimbledon, at lord Craven's. There is a print of him, but it is very scarce.

Sir THOMAS CHALONER, Governor of Prince Henry; at lord Orford's, at Houghton, Norfolk.

Sir HENRY SAVILE; at Mr. Sheldon's, at Welton, in Warwickshire †.

The Countess of Suffolk; at Gorhambury.

Lady ARABELLA STUART; at Welbeck. Mr. Walpole has a copy in water-colours. There is a very scarce print of her.

REIGN of CHARLES I.

The Princess ELIZABETH, Daughter of Charles the First; at the duke of Northumberland's, at Sion.

English, and from English into Latin. The same author mentions her collections from Plato, Aristotle, and Seneca. These pieces, which were never printed, are, as he informs us, preserved in the royal library.

* Created 22 Jac. I. See an account of him, under the name of HOLLES, in the "Biographia Britannica."

† There is another portrait of him in the picture-gallery, at Oxford.

Prince

Prince RUPERT, and Prince MAURICE, in one picture; at lord Craven's, at Combe, in Warwickshire.

The Queen of Bohemia, and all her Children, in different pictures, are at the same place.

HENRY DANVERS, Earl of Danby; at lord Orford's, at Houghton, Norfolk.

Lord BROOK, who was killed in the civil war; at Warwick Castle.

Sir GEORGE VILLIERS, Father of the first Duke of Buckingham (Lord Clarendon's Ghost); at Strawberry Hill.

Sir SAMUEL LUKE (the Hudibras of Butler): at Mr. Barber's, at Adderbury, in Oxfordshire.

The Countess of Derby, who defended Latham House; at Mr. Walpole's.

ANNE, Countess of Dorset, Pembroke and Montgomery; at Mr. Walpole's, in Arlington-street. There is a very scarce print of her, which represents her young.

The Countess of Buckingham, Mother of the Duke; at the Duke of Montagu's.

REIGN of CHARLES II.

HENRY JERMYN, Earl of St. Alban's, supposed Husband of Queen Henrietta Maria; at Strawberry Hill.

Serjeant MAYNARD; at Strawberry Hill.

The famous Countess of Shrewsbury, Mistress of the second Duke of Buckingham of the Name of Villers; at the Duke of Montagu's.

The Beauties of Windsor, except two or three at most, have not yet been engraved.

Lady Chesterfield, and Lady Southesk; at the late sir Andrew Fountain's, at Narford, Norfolk.

Mrs. LUCY WALTERS, Mother of the Duke of Monmouth; at Strawberry Hill.

REIGN of WILLIAM III.

The Countess of Newburg, Lord Lansdown's Mira; at the duke of Montagu's. There is an uncommon mezzotinto of her.

REIGN of ANNE.

Dr. ARBUTHNOT; at the earl of Bristol's, in St. James's Square.

REIGN of GEORGE I.

The Duke of Wharton; at the Queen's House. There is a print of him by Simon, which has been copied by Verrue*.

* At lord Paget's, at Beaufort in Staffordshire, is a whole length picture, by Holbein, of William lord Paget, who flourished in the reign of Mary. Lord Dartmouth has a good portrait of Charles Blount, Earl of Devonshire, which answers to Fynes Moryson's description of his person †. I hear that it is now engraving under the direction of Mr. Boydell. I have lately seen a most rare print of him in the king's library. At Magdalen college, in Oxford, are two paintings of the pious and munificent Dr. John Warner bishop of Rochester ‡. At the same place, is a portrait of the excellent Dr. Henry Hammond. At the King's Arms, in Reading, is, or was very lately, an original picture of the charitable and public-spirited Mr. John Kyrle, the MAN of ROSS.

Lately Published,

A SUPPLEMENT, consisting of Corrections and large Additions to a BIOGRAPHICAL HISTORY of England, referred to their proper Places in that Work: to which, besides an Index to the Additional Characters, are subjoined exact Emendations and Improvements of the Index to the former Volumes; and a List of Curious Portraits of Eminent Persons not yet engraved, communicated by the Honourable HORACE WALPOLE, to the Author, JAMES GRANGER, Vicar of Shiplake, in Oxfordshire.

This Supplement completes the first Edition of the “ Biographical History,” in quarto.

SERMONS, written by the same Author, and printed for T. DAVIES, in Russel, Street, Covent-Garden.

1. An Apology for the Brute Creation. The Third Edition. Price 6d.

2. The Nature and Extent of Industry, Preached before his Grace, Frederick, Archbishop of Canterbury, the 4th of July, 1773, in the Parish Church of Shiplake, in Oxfordshire. Price 6d.
